Dedication

To the brave men and women who courageously entered the wilderness two centuries and less ago to build a township based on civil and moral laws prescribed by Charter and personal principles. The fearless acceptance of inconceivable hardships by these pioneers gave courage to eight amateur historians who were delegated to write down their achievements for the preservation of the proud heritage of Corinth.

Preface

The printing of the History of Corinth for the Bicentennial in 1964 was authorized at Town Meeting on March 7, 1960. Selectmen Eugene D. Eastman, Leonard P. Simpson and C. John Williams appointed Marguerite (Mrs. Lawrence M.) Jackman as chairman with the privilege of choosing a committee to work with her. Before the meeting ended Viola (Mrs. Elwin) Hastings, Town Clerk, Alice (Mrs. Fred) Hood, Honora (Mrs. Eugene) Eastman, Marjorie (Mrs. Henry T.) Metcalf and Nettie (Mrs. Ernest) Flanders consented to serve on the committee. To this list were later added the names of Esther (Mrs. Kenneth) Eastman and Miss Everdene Hood.

Town books and documents were thoroughly checked and records searched in state and town libraries, also the Library of Congress. The study of deeds, charts, letters, maps, old newspapers, diaries, scrap-books, early histories, articles and gazatteers, obituaries, church and genealogical records, personal interviews and country-wide correspondence were all part of the task. So numerous were the references researched that it is impossible to list all of them by title, or the names of many kind people who loaned material or aided in other ways. To them are extended the sincere appreciation of the Committee Members who acknowledge that without their help the history would be less complete.

In a project of this magnitude errors are bound to occur; omissions will be found, some of which were intentional. The flora and fauna, birds and rock minerals, and detailed accounts of late wars were not stressed. It was agreed that full records of early years would be dwelled upon and less emphasis placed on more recent events for the benefit of future historians who may have enough interest in Corinth to carry on where this study leaves off. The sifting of material to a final account as herein written was done by amateurs who admit their inadequacies but did their best to accomplish the assignment. They all felt that it was a privilege to donate their services to the town.

It is our hope that the first History of Corinth will be read and enjoyed by all who have known this beautiful old town as their birthplace or adopted home, by friends or descendants of pioneers wherever they may live, preserving it for future generations so that they, too, may know how very proud is their heritage.

he is to Notify and Govern agreable to the Laws and Customs of Our said Province; and that the annual Meeting for ever hereafter for the Choice of such Officers for the said Town, shall be on the first Tuesday of March annually, TO HAVE and to HOLD the said Tract of Land as above expressed, together with all Privileges and Appurtenances, to them and their respective Heirs and Assigns forever, upon the following Conditions, viz.

I. That every Grantee, his Heirs or Assigns shall plant and cultivate five Acres of Land within the Term of five Years for every fifty Acres contained in his or their Share or Proportion of Land in said Township, and continue to improve and settle the same by additional Cultivations, on Penalty of the Forfeiture of his Grant or Share in the said Township, and of its reverting to Us, our Heirs and Successors, to be by Us or them Re-granted to such of our Subjects as shall effectually settle and cultivate the same.

II. That all white and other Pine Trees within the said Township, fit for Masting Our Royal Navy, be carefully preserved for that Use, and none to be cut or felled without Our special Licence for so doing first had and obtained, upon the Penalty of the Forfeiture of the Right of such Grantee, his Heirs and Assigns, to Us, our Heirs and Successors, as well as being subject to the Penalty of any Act or Acts of Parliament that now are, or hereafter shall be Enacted.

III. That before any Division of the Land be made to and among the Grantees, a Tract of Land as near the Centre of the said Township as the Land will admit of, shall be reserved and marked out for Town Lots, one of which shall be allotted to each Grantee of the Contents of one Acre.

IV. Yielding and paying therefor to Us, our Heirs and Successors for the Space of ten Years, to be computed from the Date hereof, the Rent of one Ear of Indian Corn only, on the twenty-fifth Day of December annually, if lawfully demanded, the first Payment to be made on the twenty-fifth Day of December, 1764.

V. Every Proprietor, Settler or Inhabitant, shall yield and pay unto Us, our Heirs and Successors yearly, and every Year forever, from and after the Expiration of ten Years from the abovesaid twenty-fifth Day of December, namely, on the twenty-fifth Day of December, which will be in the Year of Our Lord 1774 One shilling Proclamation Money for every Hundred Acres he so owns, settles or possesses, and so in Proportion for a greater or lesser Tract of the said Land; which Money shall be paid by the respective Persons abovesaid, their Heirs or Assigns, in our Council Chamber in Portsmouth, or to such Officer or Officers as shall be appointed to receive the same; and this to be in Lieu of all other Rents and Services whatsoever.

In Testimony whereof we have caused the Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. Witness BENNING WENTWORTH, Esq; Our Governor and Commander in Chief of Our said Privinçe, the Fourth Day of Feb'ry In the Year of our Lord CHRIST, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Sixty four And in the Fourth Year of Our Reign.

TOWN OF CORINTH CHARTER

CORINTH (Confirmatory Patent) March 2, 1772

(New York Land Patents, vol. 16, pp. 132-142)

George the Third by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith and so forth. To all to whom these Presents shall come Greeting. Whereas our Province of New York in America hath ever since the Grant thereof to James Duke of York been abutted and bounded to the East in Part by the West Bank or side of Connecticut River, And Whereas of late Years great Part of our said Province lying to the Westward of the same River hath nevertheless been pretended to be granted by divers Instruments under the Great Seal of the Province of New Hampshire, as tho' the same Lands had then belonged to and were within the Bounds and Limits of the said Province of New Hampshire, and within the Powers and Jurisdiction of the Government thereof. And Whereas among others the Tract of Land by these Presents herein after granted Part of our said Province of New York as aforesaid hath been so pretended to be granted and to be erected into a Township of the said Province of New Hampshire by the name of Corinth.

And Whereas our loving Subject Samuel Ward in Behalf of himself and his Associates by his humble Petition * presented unto our late trusty and well beloved Sir Henry Moore, Baronet, deceased, then our Captain General and Governor in Chief of our said Province of New York, and read in our Council for said Province of New York on the Eighteenth Day of July which was in the Year of our Lord one Thousand Seven Hundred and sixty six (July 18, 1766), did set forth among other Things in Substance, that the said Tract or Parcel of Land called Corinth, lyeth in our said Province of New York about six miles West of Connecticut River, Contains upwards of Twenty four Thousand (24,000) Acres, and is bounded as follows: Beginning at the Southwesterly Corner Bounds of a certain Tract of Land commonly called or known by the Name of Newbury, thence running South Thirty two Degrees West six Miles and an half to a Beech Tree commonly called CW, being the northwesterly Corner of a certain Tract of Land commonly called and known by the Name of Fairlie; Thence North Sixty two Degrees West six Miles to a Beech Tree also marked CW, Then North thirty Degrees East Six Miles to a Maple Tree, also marked CW, being the Southwesterly Corner Bounds of a Certain Tract of Land commonly called or known by the Name of Topsham; Then South sixty-five Degrees East Six Miles and ten Chains by the said Tract of Land known by the name of Topsham to the Place of Beginning being a Beech Tree, also marked CW;

That the Petitioner and his Associated were willing and desirous to secure their Property, Possessions and Improvements by obtaining our Grant under the Seal of our said Province of New York and to hold the same under such Grant; And therefore the Petitioner did humbly pray our Letters Patent Granting to the Petitioner and his Associates, their Heirs and Assigns, the said Tract of Land above described, and that the same might be erected into a Township and vested with the same Powers and Privileges as other Towns in our said Province of New York had and did enjoy.

Which Petition having been then referred to a Committee of our Council for our said Province of New York, our said Council did afterwards on the same Day in Pursuance of the Report of the said Committee, humbly advise and Consent that our said late Captain General and Governor in Chief should by our Letters Patent grant to the said Samuel Ward and the other Persons his Associates whose Names are mentioned in the said Report, the Tract of Land aforesaid, to be erected into a Township with the usual Privileges, under the Quit Rent, Provisoes, Limitations and Restrictions prescribed by our Royal Instructions Except the Shares and Proportions of the said Tract formerly allotted to or claimed by Benning Wentworth Esquire, Theodore Atkinson, Theodore Atkinson, Junior, Nathaniel Barrel, Mark Hunking Wentworth and Amos Moody, which having no Improvement made there upon were to remain vested in us, And that the several Shares of the said Tract, which by the said pretended Grant or Charter from the Government of New Hampshire were intended for public Uses should be granted in Trust as follows, that is to say: One such Share for the Use of the Society for the Propogation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts; A like share as a Glebe for the Use of the Minister of the Gospel in Communion of the Church of England as by Law established for the Time being residing on the Premises; A like Share for the first settled Minister of the Gospel in the said Town, and one Hundred Acres for the Use of a School master residing on the Premises; And Whereas our loving Subjects Samuel Holland, John Taplin and Henry Moore in Behalf of themselves and the other Owners and Proprietors under the pretended Grant of the Government of New Hampshire of the said Tract of Land called Corinth, did by their humble Petition presented unto our trusty and well beloved William Tryon Esquire, our Captain General and Governor in Chief, in and over our said Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon in America, Chancellor and Vice Admiral of the same, and read in our said Council on the Twelfth Day of February, now last past, set forth, among other Things, that the said Samuel Ward and almost all of the Persons interested in said Tract at the Time of the Proceedings herein before recited, had since disposed of their Rights therein to the said Petitioners and their Associates:

And therefore they the said Petioners did humbly pray that their Names, and the Names of their Associates mentioned in the Schedule to the said Petition annexed, might be inserted as Grantees in the Letters Patent aforesaid, instead of the Persons mentioned and intended as Grantees in and by the Report and Proceedings above recited, And that the Shares of the said Tract so formerly allotted to the Persons above named and directed as aforesaid, to remain vested in us, Except the Share of the said Benning Wentworth might be included in the Grant for the Benefit of the present Owners thereof.

On due Consideration of which last recited Petition our said Council did humbly advise, that instead of the persons mentioned in the said Report, our Letters Patent for the said Tract of Land should issue to the said Petioners Samuel Holland, John Taplin and Henry Moore and their Associates whose Names are mentioned in the Schedule aforesaid, And that the Shares or Proportions of the said Tract so formerly allotted to the said Theodore Atkinson, Theodore Atkinson, Junior, Nathaniel Barrel, Mark Hunking Wentworth and Amos Moody, and directed to remain vested in us as aforesaid, be granted by our said Letters Patent, and that the whole of the said Tract be erected into a Township by the Name of Corinth.

In Pursuance whereof and in Obedience to our said Royal Instructions, our Commissioners appointed for the setting out all Lands to be granted within our said Province, have set out for them the said Samuel Holland, John Taplin and Henry Moore, and for their Associates mentioned in the Schedule aforesaid, to wit, William Wickham, Cornelius Vandenbergh, Adam Vandenbergh, Gilbert Burger, Thomas Duncan, John Shatford Jones, John L. C. Roome, Garret Abeel, John Fowler, Joseph Charter, William Crossley, John Blacklock, Samuel Roberts, Oliver Willard, John Somerndyck, Henry Broadwell, Peter Webbers, John Carpender, Junior, and Obadiah Wells, All that certain Tract or Parcel of Land known by the Name of Corinth, situate lying and being on the West Side of Connecticut River in the County of Cloucester within our Province of New York,

Beginning at a Beech Tree marked with the Letters W K, Northwest Corner P M, E W; which said Tree is the Place where the Township of Kingsland (Washington) begins, and also the Place where the Township of Gageborough (Vershire) begins; and runs thence along the Northernmost Bounds of the last mentioned Township South sixty two Degrees, East four Hundred and eighty Chains, to the Township of Mooretown (Bradford); Then along the Westernmost Bounds of the last mentioned Township North thirty two Degrees, East five Hundred and twenty Chains; then North Sixty six Degrees, West five Hundred Chains to the Township of Kempeton (Orange); Then along the Easternmost Bounds of the last mentioned Township, and the Easternmost Bounds of the above mentioned Township of Kingsland (Washington), South thirty Degrees, West four Hundred and Eighty Chains to the Place where this Tract began, Containing Twenty three Thousand and one Hundred Acres of Land, and the usual allowance for highways, and containing, exclusive of the five, several Lots or Parcels of Land hereinafter described, Twenty one Thousand and six Hundred Acres of Land and the usual Allowance for Highways, One of which said Lots of Land distinguished by the Name of the fifth Lot, is to remain vested in us, and is bounded as follows, that is to say:

Beginning at the Northeasternmost Corner of the above mentioned larger Tract of which this fifth Lot is a Part; and runs thence along the Northernmost Bounds of the said larger Tract; and then along the last mentioned Bounds North Thirty two Degrees, East fifty three Chains, to the Place where this fifth Lot began, Containing five Hundred Acres of Land and the usual Allowance for Highways.

And also our said Commissioners have set out the several Lots hereinafter described, Parts and Parcels of the said larger Tract, for the several and respective Uses and Purposes herein after mentioned, that is to say, For the Use of The Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in in Foreign Parts, All that certain Lot or Parcel of Land distinguished by the Name of the First lot, and which begins at the Distance of Two Hundred and Eighty eight Chains measured on a Course North Seventy three Degrees East from the above mentioned Beech Tree where the above described larger Tract, of which this Lot is a Part begins, and runs from the End of the said two Hundred and eighty eight Chains, South Sixty two Degrees, East one Hundred Chains, then North thirty two Degrees, East thirty one Chains and two rods; then North Sixty two Degrees, West one Hundred Chains; and then South thirty two degrees, West Thirty one Chains and two rods to the Place where this Lot began, Containing three Hundred Acres of Land and the usual Allowance for Highways.

For a Glebe for the Use of the Minister of the Gospel in the Communion of the Church of England as by Law established, for the time being residing on the said larger Tract, All that certain Lot or Parcel of Land distinguished by the name of the second Lot, and which begins at the Northwesternmost Corner of the above mentioned First Lot containing 300 Acres of Land and the usual Allowance for Highways

For the first settled Minister of the Gospel on the said Larger Tract All that certain Lot or Parcel of Land distinguished by the Name of the third Lot, which begins at the Northwesternmost Corner of the above mentioned second Lot containing 300 Acres of Land, and the usual Allowance for highways.

And for the Use of a Schoolmaster residing on the said larger Tract All that certain Lot or Parcel of Land distinguished by the Name of the fourth Lot, which begins at the North westernmost Corner of the above mentioned third Lot, Containing One Hundred Acres of Land and the usual Allowance for highways.

And in setting out the said larger Tract and the several Lots and Parcels of Land last described, our said Commissioners have had Regard to the profitable and unprofitable Acres, and have taken Care that the Length of any of them doth not extend along the Banks of any River otherwise than is conformable to our said Royal Instructions, as by a Certificate thereof under their Hands bearing Date the Twenty second Day of February now last past, and entered on Record in our Secretary's Office for our said Province of New York, may more fully appear.

Which said Tract of Twenty three Thousand and one Hundred Acres of Land and the usual allowance for Highways, so set out as aforesaid according to our said Royal Instructions, We being willing to grant to the Petitioners last aforesaid and their Associates above named, their heirs and Assigns forever (Except as is herein after excepted) with the several Powers and Privileges, and to, and upon, the several and respective Use and Uses, Trusts, Intents and Purposes, Limitations and Appointments, and under the several Reservations, Exceptions, Provisoes and Conditions herein after expressed, limited declared and appointed of and concerning the same and every Part and Parcel thereof respectively.

Know Ye that of our especial Grace, certain Knowledge and meer Motion, We have given, granted, ratified and confirmed, and do by these Presents for us, our Heirs and Successors, give, grant ratify and confirm unto them the said Samuel Holland, John Taplin, Henry Moore, William Wickham, Cornelius Vandenbergh, Adam Vandenbergh, Gilbert Burger, Thomas Duncan, John Shatford Jones, John L. Roome, Garret Abeel, John Fowler, Joseph Charter, William Crossley, John Blacklock, Samuel Roberts, Oliver Willard, John Somerndyck, Henry Broadwell, Peter Webbers, John Carpender, Junior, and Obadiah Wells, their Heirs and Assigns respectively, To their only proper and separate use and Behoof respectively for ever, as Tenants in Common and not as Joint Tenants, And to and for no other Use or Uses, Intent or Purpose whatsoever; All and singular the said Tract of Land and Premises hereby granted and every Part and Parcel thereof, To be holden of us, our Heirs and Successors in free and common Socage as of our Manor of East Greenwich in our County of Kent within our Kingdom of Great Britain.

Yielding, Rendering and Paying therefore yearly and every Year for ever unto us, our Heirs and Successors at our Custom House in our City of New York in our said Province of New York, unto our or their Collector or Receiver General there for the Time Being, on the Feast of the Annunciation of the blessed Virgin Mary, commonly called Lady Day, the yearly Rent of Two Shillings and six Pence Sterling for each and every Hundred Acres of the above granted Lands, and so in Proportion for any lesser Quantity thereof, Saving and except for such Part of the said Lands allowed for Highways as above mentioned, in Lieu and stead of all other Rents, Services, Dues, Duties and Demands whatsoever for the hereby granted Lands and Premises or any Part thereof.

And we do of our especial Grace, certain Knowledge and meer Motion, create, erect and constitute the said large Tract of Land Containing Twenty three Thousand and one Hundred Acres of Land herein before mentioned and every Part and Parcel thereof a Township for ever hereafter to be, continue and remain, and by the Name of Corinth for ever hereafter to be called and known;

(Here follow provisions granting powers and authorities to the township; authorizing the election of officers at annual town meetings, granting authority to the officers; method of filling vacancies between annual elections; requirements for settling families and cultivation of the land, and restrictions in cutting pine trees.)

And for the better and more easily Carrying on and Managing the Publick Affairs and Business of the said Township our Royal Will and Pleasure is and We do hereby for us Our Heirs and Successors give and Grant to the Inhabitants of the said Township All the Powers, Authorities, Privileges and Advantages heretofore given and granted to or legally enjoyed by all or either our other Townships within our said Province.

And We also ordain and establish that there shall be for ever hereafter in the said Township two Assessors, one Treasurer, two Overseers of the Highways, two Overseers of the Poor, one Collector and four Constables elected and chosen out of the Inhabitants of the said Township yearly and every Year on the first Tuesday in May at the Most Public Place in the said Township by the Majority of the Inhabitants thereof then and there met and assembled for that Purpose; Hereby Declaring that wheresoever the first Election in the said Township shall be held, the future Elections shall thereafter be held in the same Place, as near as may be, until another Place in the said Township shall be agreed upon, fixed and appointed for that purpose, by the Majority Of such of the Inhabitants assembled at any annyal Election, which we do hereby authorize them to do. Hereby Declaring that such Place so agreed upon, fixed and appointed by the Majority Of such of the Inhabitants as shall be so assembled, shall thereafter be and continue the Place of the future Elections until the same shall be by the Inhabitants of the said Township altered and another place ascertained for that Purpose in Manner aforesaid.

And we do hereby Give and grant unto the said Officers so from Time to Time to be chosen, Power and Authority to exercise their said several and respective Offices during one whole Year from such Election and until others are legally chosen and elected in their Room and stead, as fully and amply as any the like Officers have, or legally may Use or exercise their Offices in our said Province. And in Case any or either of the said Officers of the said Township should die or remove from the said Township before the Time of their annual Service shall be expired, or refuse to act in the Offices for which they shall respectively be chosen, then our Royal Will and Pleasure further is, and we do hereby direct, ordain and require the Inhabitants of the said Township to meet at the Place where the then next annual Election shall be appointed to be held for the said Township, and choose other or others of the Inhabitants of the said Township in the place and stead of him or them so dying, Removing or Refusing to act, within forty Days next after such Contingency.

And to prevent any undue Election in this Case, we do hereby ordain, and require that upon every Vacancy in the Office of Assessor, the Treasurer, and in either of the other Offices, the Assessors of the said Township for the Time being or the survivor of Them, shall within ten Days next after any such Vacancy first happens, appoint the Day for such Election and give public Notice thereof in Writing under his or their Hands, by affixing such Notice on the Church Door or other most Public place in the said Township at the least Ten Days before the Day appointed for such Election. And in Default thereof we do hereby require the officer or Officers of the said Township, or the Survivor of them, who in the order they are herein before mentioned, shall next succeed him or them so Making Default, within ten Days next after such Default, to appoint the Day for such Election and give Notice thereof as aforesaid.

Hereby giving and Granting that such Person or persons as shall be so chosen by the Majority of such of the Inhabitants of the said Township as shall meet in the Manner hereby directed, shall have hold exercise and enjoy the office or offices to which he or they shall be so elected and chosen from the Time of such Election until the first Tuesday in May then next following, and until other or others be legally chosen in his or their Place and stead, as fully as the Person or Persons in whose place he or they shall be chosen might or could have done by virtue of these Presents.

And we do hereby will and direct that this method shall for ever hereafter be used for the Filling up all Vacancies that shall happen in any or either of the said Offices between the annual Elections above directed. Provided always and upon Condition nevertheless that if our said Grantees, their Heirs, or Assigns or some or one of them shall not within three years next after the Date thereof, settle on the said Tract of Land hereby granted, so many Families as shall amount to one Family for every Thousand Acres thereof, Or if they our said Grantees or one of them, their or one of their Heirs or Assignes, shall not also within three years to be computed as aforesaid, plant and effectually cultivate at the least three Acres for every fifty Acres of such of the hereby granted Lands as are capable of Cultivation; Or if they our said Grantees, or any of them; their or any of their Heirs or Assignes, or any other person or persons by their or any of the Privity Consent or Procurement, shall fell, cut down, or otherwise destroy any of the Pine Trees by these Presents reserved to us, our Heirs and Successors, or hereby intended so to be, without the Royal License of us, our Heirs or Successors, for so Doing first had and obtained that then and in any of these Cases, this our present Grant and every Thing therein Contained, shall cease and be absolutely void, and the Lands and Premises hereby granted shall revert to and vest in us our Heirs and Successors, as if this our present Grant, had not been made, any Thing herein before contained to the Contrary in any wise notwithstanding.

Provided further and upon Condition also nevertheless, And we do hereby for us, our Heirs and Successors direct and appoint that this our present Grant shall be registered and entered on Record within six Months from the date thereof in our said Secretary's Office in our City of New York in our said Province of New York in one of the Books of Patents there remaining, and that a Docquet thereof shall be also entered in our Auditor's Office there for our said Province of New York; And that in Default thereof this our present Charter shall be void and of none Effect any Thing before in these Presents contained to the Contrary thereof in any wise not.-withstanding.

And we do moreover of our especial Grace, certain Knowledge and meer Motion consent and agree, that this our present Grant being registered, recorded and a Docquet thereof made as before directed and appointed shall be good and effectual in the Law to all Intents, Constructions and Purposes whatsoever against us, our Heirs and Successors, notwithstanding any Mis-reciting, Misbounding, Misnaming or other Imperfection or Omission of in or in any wise concerning the above granted or hereby mentioned or intended to be granted Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments and Premises or any Part thereof.

In testimony whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province of New York to be hereunto affixed.

Witness our said trust and well beloved William Tryon Esquire our said Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over our said Province of New York and the Territories depending thereon in America, Chancellor and Vice Admiral of the same, at our Fort in our City of New York the second Day of March in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Seventy two and of our Reign the Twelfth (March 2, 1772).

Charters and Reservations

THE TOWN was first issued a charter on February 4, 1764, by Governor Benning Wentworth of the Province of New Hampshire in the Fourth Year of the Reign of George the Third of England. It was called Corinth, making it No. 126 in the list of townships allotted by him in Vermont territory, the first being Bennington in 1749 which he honored with his name. These townships took their regional name from his province, becoming known as the New Hampshire Grants. Fat fees, and a reservation of five hundred acres in each town for his personal use and benefit, were rapidly making this royal realtor one of the richest men in the colonies.

English provinces in America had definite boundary lines over which their royal governors, appointed by the king, held jurisdiction. The vast unsettled territory between Lake Champlain and the Connecticut River was claimed by the Province of New York but avaricious Governor Wentworth conveniently overlooked this fact as he divided the land into townships while the attention of its rightful owner was distracted during the French and Indian Wars from 1754-1763. He continued to ignore provincial boundary restrictions despite angry denunciations from New York and stern warnings from England when they became aware of his transactions. Wentworth stubbornly insisted the disputed townships came under his jurisdiction while New York, in rebuttal, ordered the High Sheriff of Albany County to make a list of all persons holding land in Vermont so that legal action could be taken against them.

On July 20, 1764, the Order in Council issued at the Court of St. James fixed the boundary of the Province of New York at the western bank of the Connecticut River and fixed Governor Wentworth, too, as the last town granted by him was Hubbardton, No. 127, in June of that year. There was little of this richest and most desirable land left ungranted by him when he was finally curbed by the explosive wrath of New York and the Commissioner of Trade and Plantations in London who sharply ordered him to cease and desist. It was too late, however, to prevent the strife which was arising between settlers claiming ownership of the same lands under conflicting charters issued by both provinces.

Gov. Wentworth optimistically assured his worried grantees that New Hampshire did have the right to grant the townships, that titles to their lands would be confirmed in London, and told them to go ahead and settle on their lands. This many of them did. Sixty-seven of the disputed townships were on the west side of the New Hampshire Grants and sixty on the east, separated by the Green Mountains. The hornet's nest of contradictory claims stirred up by Wentworth did not affect the eastern towns as much as those to the west who were ordered to surrender their lands to New York.

Of the sixty-one petitioners listed on the New Hampshire charter to Corinth only one concerns us at the moment. Samuel Ward was chosen to protect their grant from being rejected, or settlers harrassed, by the Province of New York. He and a small group of influential proprietors bought up all available rights before rushing to New York where Ward petitioned his Excellency, Sir Henry Moore, in the name of himself and associates, for a confirmatory charter to the township of Corinth, requesting it in the name of Conway. The switch in names is a mystery unless Ward thought it would be more acceptable than the one approved by the odious Wentworth.

His petition stated that he and associates were the sole proprietors of the tract, that the town had been surveyed and divided into lots which were numbered and drawn for, and that there were personally on the premises fifteen inhabitants at work clearing their lands. Also there would have been fifteen more inhabitants if the township had not fallen within the bounds of New York Province, making their New Hampshire land titles invalid. Ward swore that if the Province of New York would make the affair legal by giving them a confirmatory charter, his associates would immediatly build a town. These statements and other indisputable records entirely disprove the account of the settlement of Corinth as given in Zadock Thompson's Gazetteer of Vermont, 1824, and later Gazetteers which are exact copies of the myth that the first men to locate in Corinth were Ezekiel Colby, John Nutting and John Armond of Newbury who were sent here by Col. John Taplin in the spring of 1777 to spend several weeks manufacturing maple sugar. Each carried a five-pail kettle on his head as they traveled twelve miles through the woods, guided by a pocket compass. After encamping the first night on a small island in the Waits River near the present village of East Corinth, they arrived at their destination near the center of town and must have been greeted warmly by settlers in that vicinity who had preceded them by a number of years.

Ward's petition was read in Council on July 18, 1766, and the matter referred a few hours later to a committee for consideration. The committee recommended that the charter be confirmed, except that the shares formerly allotted to or claimed by Gov. Benning Wentworth, his Secretary, Theodore

Atkinson, Jr., Nathaniel Barrel, Mark Hunkins Wentworth, Amos Moody and Theodore Atkinson, Sr., all friends or relatives of Wentworth and equally interested in a quick profit, were to revert to the Province of New York for redistribution. Four days later the Warrant for a confirmatory charter was signed and the following year Deputy Phineas Mun surveyed the tract of land, known by the name of Corinth, for Samuel Ward and his Associates.

For the next five years Ward and friends continued to buy individual shares ranging in price from a few shillings to several pounds. Shares in different townships varied in size, most of them being for 250 acres each, but in Corinth they actually contained 333⅓ acres or three shares to 1,000 acres, one share sometimes being split up between a number of less important grantees which is explained further along. Most of the shares picked up by Ward and others were then sold to their associates Samuel Holland, John Taplin and Henry Moore.

During these same years the Province of New York was granting charters to many of the towns already settled under grants from Benning Wentworth. The punishments dealt out by holders of conflicting property rights ranged from floggings to assaults of a more serious nature. Although the Province of New York was warned in 1770 from London not to grant any more land in Vermont, or to carry out surveys of same, the slowness of communications and travel led to abuses by the colonial governor who ignored instructions from the Crown.

For protection of their rights and the few settlers already located in town, Samuel Holland in turn hastened to New York. Acting as spokesman for the trio, Holland, who was Surveyor General of the Northern District of North America, on February 12, 1772, petitioned the Council of the Province of New York, now governed by Sir William Tryon, that they and nineteen new associates, mostly Yorkers, mentioned in the schedule annexed to his petition, be inserted as grantees or proprietors in place of Ward and others previously listed on the application for a confirmatory charter; also that the shares of land in Corinth formerly allotted to Ward and others be vested in them, including the shares of Benning Wentworth, Esq. which they would use for the benefit of the present owners, Holland, Taplin and Moore.

As they were old acquaintances and friends it was not surprising when the Council went along whole-heartedly with their proposals, returning the shares of Atkinsons, junior and senior, Barrel, Moody and Mark Hunkins Wentworth for the benefit of the new proprietors, but reserving to the Crown, which might mean their own governor or some other equally important personage, the fifth lot of five hundred acres formerly earmarked for Benning Wentworth. Before the grant was made two thousand pounds were to be paid for the land. The second confirmatory charter came through on March 2, 1772, at the Fort in the City of New York, in the Twelfth Year of the Reign of George III. Now that the town of Corinth was again legally sanctioned, settlement in large numbers would be promoted and any squatters located here must pay well for their land or get out as these proprietors, for the most part, were speculators who desired nothing more than a quick and highly profitable turnover on their money which had been invested in fees and gratuities. In addition to these expenses Holland, Taplin and Moore also had money tied up in shares previously bought by them to increase their holdings in town.

Both charters ruled that four lots or parcels of land were to be reserved for use of the town, and the fifth lot for the Crown. This fifth lot, or Governor's farm as it was more commonly called, of five hundred acres in Corinth enriched no one but proprietor John Taplin as unrest and open rebellion were raging in parts of Vermont over land disputes, and would within a few years spread throughout the colonies in protest against tax abuses. Lot five under the original charter from New Hampshire began at the northeastern corner of town, thence along the northern border making more or less of a rectangle as the line returned to point of beginning, which places part of it in East Corinth village. In the New York survey it was located in the southeast corner, making it equally desirable. If the Crown could have foreseen the fame and picturesque beauty it was to lose here the Redcoats might have fought harder to hold it.

The first lot of three hundred acres was designated for use of the Incorporated Society for the Propogation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, meaning that under English rule the heathen was of equal concern to the government as the Puritan. The charter made certain that settlers were not going to become backsliding Christians if they could be safe-guarded by sending missionaries to administer unto them. The circuit preacher would partially fulfill this requirement as he traveled through the remote settlements.

The second lot, also of three hundred acres, was reserved for a Glebe (land belonging to the church) for the use of a minister of the gospel in the Communion of the Church of England. There was room for a church, rectory, and graveyard too, on this lot to spread the King's religious faith and to bury members of good standing in God's Acre. None of his clergy ever came to town to establish a church and to this day yearly rents are paid to the Episcopal Diocese of Vermont by tenants using the land.

Three hundred acres in lot three were reserved for the first settled minister of the Gospel, be he Congregational, Methodist, Baptist or some other denomination. He too would need a church, burying ground and land for cultivation of a garden plot to eke out his small salary if any except for "merchandisable wheat" which he might receive.

The hundred acres in the fourth lot were for the use of a schoolmaster who would teach his first school in a crude barn or log cabin. He could use the land to live on, and till the soil for part of his livelihood as his salary would run as low as one dollar weekly which might not always be collected. There were a few years in the early history of Corinth when the town refused to appropriate any money for schooling.

These four lots were set aside in the center of town before any division of land could be made to the grantees who were eligible for at least one acre in a desirable location, regardless of where the remainder of their holdings might be. The first church when built would serve as a town building to transact business when the freemen met to discuss problems arising in the new settlement.

No chart was found showing the lots in town as they were first laid out and drawn for with the names of grantees or owners thereon, as is true in many other Vermont townships. Nor were there records of monthly meetings of the proprietors which were required in the charters until the town of Corinth was organized with duly-elected officers to run their affairs under established rules; otherwise the charter would be suspended. These records were doubtless destroyed by fire, while in storage in the loft of the old Cooke store in Cookeville. The missing records would have told us of activities in town prior to 1780, where the first school was kept and worship services held long before actual buildings were constructed for such purposes. Fortunately all property records, vital statistics and other important papers had been transferred to the vault, newly-constructed, in what is today the Cookeville school building.

The only chart available was the Whitelaw map of 1790 which is incomplete as it does not show all lots in town as laid out at the time, nor the entire list of property owners in the different ranges. This map, in corrected form, is shown in the History of Corinth with the names of property owners who appear in the first United States census of 1790.

In addition to the five hundred acres reserved to the Crown, all mines of gold and silver, white or other pine trees for masts for the Royal Navy, twenty-four inches diameter and upwards in girth, starting at twelve inches from the ground, belonged to his Majesty, George the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, etc. It was ridiculous to expect that pine trees of this great size would be reserved for the purpose stated as transportation alone from the inland towns defeated this requirement. Copper was buried in the earth of Corinth and if agents of the King had been aware of this valuable resource, the metal would probably have been included in the reservations.

Proprietors and Controversies

WHEN THE Province of New York formed the county of Cumberland in eastern Vermont on July 3, 1766, its northern limits paralleled the southern boundary of present-day Orange County. The region beyond soon became the retreat of criminals and outcasts who chose this remote wilderness to escape their creditors and law enforcement officers. The intelligent and industrious settlers tired of lawlessness and their petition was granted on March 7, 1770, when the territory, including Corinth, was formed into the County of Gloucester with the county seat at Kingsland (Washington.) As Kingsland was "unsettled and unknown" the seat was changed to Newbury on April 9, 1772.

At this time there were about seven hundred inhabitants throughout Gloucester County, which now included eastern Vermont, opposing the government at New York, and their ranks were swelled when another county, Charlotte, was established in western Vermont, with the towns lying south of it coming under the jurisdiction of Albany County. It was here the land feuds raged between settlers who had paid for and partly cleared their homesteads, and the Yorkers who disputed their claims to grants given under New Hampshire charters which they refused to honor. Protected by its confirmatory charter, as well as geographical location, Corinth was never involved in this border warfare. None the less its sympathies were with the oppressed settlers to the west who refused to pay twice for their lands and fought to retain them. A similar condition would arise in Corinth in later years but no blood was shed to resist confiscation of property.

The proprietors of Corinth were tories and loyal servants of their King, often risking their lives during the French and Indian Wars to make the north country safe for settlement. When the peace treaty was signed between England and France in 1763, King George III issued a proclamation on October 7 of that year: "Whereas We are Desirous upon all Occasions to testify our Royal Sense and Approbation of the Conduct and Bravery of the Officers and Soldiers of Our Armies, and to reward the same, We do hereby command and impower the Governors of our Several Provinces on the Continent of North America, to grant, without Fee or Reward (Governor Wentworth overlooked this clause!,) to such Reduced Officers as have served in North America during the late War, and to such Private Soldiers as have been or shall be disbanded in America and are actually residing there, and shall personally apply for same, the following Quantities of Land, subject at the expiration of Ten Years to the same Quit-Rents as other Lands are subject to in the Province within which they are granted, and also subject to the same Conditions of Cultivation and Improvement, Viz: To every Person having the rank of Field Officer, Five Thousand Acres. To every Captain, Three Thousand Acres. To every Subaltern or Staff Officer, Two Thousand Acres. To every Non-Commissioned Officer, Two Hundred Acres. To every Private Man, Fifty Acres."

Naturally the higher ranking officers took advantage of the offer and applied to his Majesty for large grants in the colonies. These requests were always received favorably and the colonial governors ordered to locate the amount of land to be granted in the place of the officer's choice. In some rare cases the royal governors did not go along with instructions from abroad, either because the demands were excessive or they did not think it necessary or convenient to obey royal orders. Gov. Wentworth was only too happy to give away five thousand acres to a reduced officer like Col. Taplin as he enjoyed having his palm greased with gold, or Spanish dollars. The Private Man, sometimes illiterate and signing his name with an X, was pleased to have his name on a charter and to accomodate his commanding officer by handing over his share for a shilling or two. He was usually listed as Yeoman on the transfer deed. Not only were field officers and men of lower rank rewarded with these land grants in unsettled territory, for a fee always, but also civilians who in their various ways had been helpful to, or friendly with, the provincial governor or his influential friends.

Hardly before the ink was sanded on the charters, there was a mad scramble to buy and sell shares. Some of the shares were listed under fictitious names which made the transfer easy for the few prominent grantees who planned it that way. All such deeds are carefully inscribed in the land records of Corinth, the first ones dated as early as February 10, 1764. The eighty-eight shareholders listed on the two charters and the multiple sales as shares constantly changed hands in these early years, were carefully traced until it was found that the majority eventually ended up in the hands of Col. Taplin and Henry Moore. The names of our proprietors are also found on other charters, Col. Taplin being listed in Bath and Haverhill, New Hampshire, Newbury (by purchase of proprietor shares,) Arlington and Groveton (Groton.)

Through manipulations a few worthy servants of the Crown could end up owning practically a whole township, as Col. Asa Porter did in the town of Topsham.

The principal proprietors, Holland, Moore and Taplin, their New York associates and some hold-overs from the New Hampshire charter, including Mark Hunkins Wentworth et al, whose shares the proprietors could not in good conscience appropriate to themselves, owned the town. Aware that settlers in large numbers must be persuaded to locate here without delay to preserve charter privileges, Taplin, and Moore in particular, immediately took steps to sell land for that purpose. They also continued to buy up additional acreage from any and all grantees who still held shares on either charter and were willing to sell out for ready cash. They exchanged shares of equal measure with each other to consolidate their holdings in a particular part of town, Taplin ending up owning most of the eastern half and Moore much land in the western part. For a few years Samuel Holland continued to buy and sell to his advantage until 1784 when he disposed of his entire holdings, including two-thirds of the town of Topsham, to Col. Asa Porter, a wealthy landowner of Haverhill, New Hampshire, for the sum of 550 pounds of the currency of the Province of Quebec, "equal to 2200 Spanish milled dollars or the value thereof in cattle, whichever shall be convenient."

Col. Taplin was the only proprietor to locate in town, moving here from Newbury with his large family of married and single sons and daughters, grandchildren numerous enough to make a sizeable community, and a few faithful friends who had served as Indian scouts under his command. The other proprietors were land speculators only who sent their agents into the older and more populated states of New England to promote their wares. Few of them visited town but all were familiar with every inch of land under their control.

Col. Porter was considered the largest landowner in the north country, owning over one hundred thousand acres in numerous townships in Vermont and New Hampshire, including shares he bought outright from grantees on both charters of Corinth. In 1787 he paid the widow of Mark Hunkins Wentworth 250 pounds for twenty-five full rights in the same number of Vermont townships, one of which included Corinth. Unfortunately some shares in Corinth claimed by him had already been disposed of, exchanging hands several times after being divided into smaller plots of fifty to one-hundred acres or more. For the next twenty-five years Porter engaged in legal battles with the inhabitants, and the town itself became embroiled in these lawsuits when it voted numerous times in town meeting to support individuals in their fight to save themselves from being removed from their property. This did happen in several cases. Invariably the County Court in Chelsea upheld Col. Porter's claims, until both parties agreed to compromise on a fixed amount to end all litigation. From 1812 to 1815 committees were appointed to negotiate with the Colonel. When a vote was taken in favor of settling for $2500.00 in town meeting, another meeting was immediately called to rescind the action. Evidently the town never did settle with him as long after Col. Porter's death in 1818 the administrators of his vast estate liquidated, for amounts well under one hundred dollars each, its many claims against Corinth landowners. By now they had prospered and were anxious to clear titles to their property for a modest sum.

While at first abiding by the laws of the Province of New York, within a few years Corinth immigrants shifted their loyalties to the rising Republic of Vermont in its struggle against their belligerent neighbor beyond Lake Champlain, and supported its leaders in demands for statehood after the colonies declared their independence of Great Britain in 1776. The sentiments of the majority of freemen of Corinth were no longer questioned when a delegate, John Nutting, was chosen to attend the General Assembly at Windsor when it met two years later on March 12. Its purpose was to organize the new but unrecognized state that had for a brief time toyed with the name of New Connecticut before deciding for all time to be called by the descriptive name of Vermont after its green mountains. Town property deeds recorded then were patriotically dated the 2nd year of the Independence of the United States of America, Annoque Dom. 1778.

Twelve years hence the General Assembly met again at Windsor in October, 1790, to levy a tax of half-penny on the acre on all lands in the State of Vermont, except land sequestered for Public, Pious and Charitable uses, for the purpose of paying thirty thousand dollars due the State of New York for all its rights and titles to Vermont lands. John Lovewell, tax collector of Corinth, sold numerous lots at several public sales as late as 1796 to raise the town's portion of payment. Inhabitants who had a dollar or two to spare, and surprisingly there were not many, were able to increase their acreage by buying up lots, or parts thereof, held by absentee landlords who oftentimes failed to redeem property sold for taxes within the prescribed time limit set by law.

Old quarrels were forgiven and forgotten when Corinth joined the rest of Vermont in celebration of its admission to the Union as the fourteenth state on March 4, 1791. Some of our local celebrants were men who had become familiar with the north country when they participated in campaigns during the French and Indian Wars, returning after the Peace Treaty to hack a home out of the wilderness they found here. By their own personalities and abilities they became influential leaders in the raw community, prospering with the growth of the town. Our Corinth settler was disproving the colonial tradition that only a man born to a family of wealth and influence could aspire to leadership.

Corinth Geography Then and Now

LET US see how the town "to be forever called Corinth" appeared to the royal grantors, Governors Wentworth and Tryon, and as it is today. "A new Plantation in a tract six miles square, containing by admeasurement twenty-four thousand acres and no more," proclaimed the New Hampshire charter after the survey and plan had been returned to the Secretary's office at Portsmouth. Out of this area 1040 acres were to be reserved for highways and unimprovable lands. The bounds as outlined began at the southwesterly corner of the town of Newbury running south 32 degrees, west about 6½ miles to the northwesterly corner bound of Fairlee, thence north 61 degrees west 6 miles, thence north 30 degrees east about 6 miles to the southwesterly corner of Topsom, thence south 65 degrees east by Topsom aforesaid to bounds begun at. Boundary descriptions, Privileges of Enfranchisement and Immunities were brief, as if Gov. Wentworth could not waste time filling in the usual details on the charter with New York breathing hotly down his neck.

Such was not the case in the confirmatory charter which stated at great length that the parcel of land, known as Corinth, on the west side of the Connecticut River in the County of Gloucester, within the Province of New York, began at a marked beech tree at the corner of the Township of Kingsland (Washington) and also the place where Gageborough (Vershire) begins; thence along the northernmost bounds of Gageborough south 62 degrees east four hundred and eighty chains to Township of Mooretown (Bradford), then along the westernmost bounds of Mooretown north 32 degrees, east five hundred and twenty chains; thence north 66 degrees, west five hundred chains to the Township of Kempeton (Orange), thence along the easternmost bounds of the last mentioned Township, and the easternmost bounds of Kingsland, south 30 degrees, west four hundred and eighty chains to place of beginning. This parcel contained 23,100 acres of land, exclusive of the five several lots (1500 acres,) and the usual allowance of 1040 acres for highways and unimprovable lands such as ponds, rocks, mountains and rivers.

The "abouts" of the New Hampshire survey and numerous "thences" of New York boundaries came within 140 acres of each other and both were in error. The town actually contains 28,863 acres, 4,000 of which came into dispute between a neighborhood of long-established settlers along the "gore" bordering Bradford on the southeast, and proprietors Taplin and Moore in the mid 1780's which will be explained later.

Corinth, an agricultural town in eastern Vermont, is one of seventeen towns in Orange County, centrally located therein, with a latitude of 44 degrees, 2 minutes north, and longitude 4 degrees, 42 minutes east. Boundaries on the north from west to east are Orange, Topsham and Newbury; on the east Bradford and West Fairlee; Vershire on the south and Washington on the west. It is a land of hills and valleys, irregular and diversified, containing no high mountains, ponds or lakes to interfere with agriculture. The elevations are abrupt, ranging from 665 feet at East Corinth village to the greatest height of 2206 feet on Marston Hill in the western part of town. Other elevations are Taplin Hill 1457, Hurricane Ridge where old Fort Wait is located varies from 1653 to 1760, Corinth Corner 1507, Pike Hill 1964, Corinth Center 1015, Goose Green 823, South Corinth 781, Cookeville 1000, Garden Hill 2148, West Corinth 1447 and the Robie District 1541.

Beautified by its broken contour and wooded rolling hills overlooking meadowlands and pastures, the scenery is magnificent, providing in places a panoramic view of the mountains of New Hampshire to the east and breathless rural vistas throughout the entire town. It has been the delight of photographers and scenic painters for years as they pour in from all over the country, especially East Corinth which has been labeled the ideal type of New England village as it nestles between Sleeper Hill on the east and McArthur Hill on the west. Its picture, taken from many different angles to emphasize the slender spire of the former Union Meetinghouse built in 1840, appears in magazines, newspapers and advertisements throughout the nation, bearing out the statement that it is the most photographed village in North America, if not the western hemisphere.

The town is well-watered with many brooks winding their way to the larger streams that flow into the Waits River as it cuts across the northeast corner and along the eastern border to join the Connecticut River a few miles eastward. Among these larger streams are the Tabor Branch from Topsham which runs along the west side of East Corinth, joining the Waits River at the outskirts of the village; Waits River Branch in the south which coils eastward across town, uniting with the South Branch, running parallel to it, at Goose Green and from there to the Waits River at a point about midway along the Bradford-Corinth border. Then there is Copper or Pike Hill Brook from which the Brook Road takes its name that rises in the north central part of town and cuts across the Barre road to join the Waits. From Taplin Hill comes Bill's Brook, and at Cookeville the Potash meanders down to Waits River Branch.

Because of its hilly surface, innumerable small brooks and springs, the watersheds of Corinth have never been of concern until droughts of recent years have lowered them to an alarming degree in many parts of town, making it necessary for farmers to draw water for their cattle when wells run dry. This hardship has been experienced at times in both summer and winter by farmers and townspeople. The latter half of 1963 was the driest season ever remembered, with many wells and brooks completely without water and the Waits River a bed of gravel and shallow pools. Several residents successfully drove new wells to amply supply their needs but for the less fortunate it meant extra hours of drudgery transporting water, with everyone in constant fear of forest fires that threatened all New England until the rains of November ended the drought and the ban on hunting.

The soil is particularly adaptable to farming pursuits, being a dark loam mixed with a small portion of sand which makes it very productive. Hay, silage corn and oats thrive in this soil. Apple orchards would increase on uplands and hillsides if property owners followed the custom of early settlers and set out trees for this purpose. The soil composition is said to account for the flavor and quality of our maple products that are so famous throughout the country and are in great demand.

The variety of trees in Corinth now does not differ too much from what were found in the virgin forests when settlers began trickling in, except for size and quantity. Rock maple, yellow and white birch, beech and red maple grew on the hills, and in the lowlands were found spruce, hemlock, the mighty pine, cedar, hackmatack and tamarack. The butternut and beech were prized for their fruit and the leverwood, so often referred to in old deeds as a boundary mark, is less familiar now. The elm and the oak are also disappearing in Corinth. The big difference is that our early settler chopped and burned trees to clear land for his home, fields and pastures, whereas today the retired tree farmer and practicing farmer set out pines, Scotch, Norway, red or white, spruce and some maple on hillsides and "unimprovable land" for a cash crop in future years. All this is done at a minimum cost with the aid of state foresters and county agents who provide untold assistance and advice.

In the past fifty years reforestation has grown to be an important business, not only here but throughout Vermont, and benefits are now being realized by the pioneers in this field who are carefully harvesting their timber under the supervision of expert woodsmen. Christmas trees alone provide a cash crop yearly for these tree planters who ship their products to metropolitan areas in November and December. There is little waste as ungainly branches are lopped off to make into wreaths and other attractive decorations for the Yuletide season.

As a result of this and other reclamation programs, also protective regulations enforced by the State Fish and Game Department, wild life has thrived in modern times and the town of Corinth in particular has a problem with steadily increasing herds of deer who feed at the expense of the farmer on fields and crops cultivated for livestock and family use. Ninety buck were reported in Corinth during the deer season from November 9-24, 1963, about twenty per cent under the total of the previous year when doe were allowed to be taken for one day.

Our early settler found plenty of game in the forests, and rivers were teeming with fish for his table. Packs of wolves, now extinct, kept the deer under control for him, decimating his flock at the same time. He was also victimized by bears who prowled around his barnyard in search of food, and while this condition does not now exist the species is on the increase locally. Trout are found in increasing numbers in our streams which are kept stocked by the State. Rabbits, partridges and other game birds are hunted in season. The wild turkey will be included when present plantings warrant it, so we still have a tie with our early settler who was thankful to find all these in abundance to add to his sparse diet. The raccoon and the porcupine, who was more appropriately called the hedgehog for his destructive, voracious habits and for whom a brook flowing into East Corinth was named are as much a nuisance today as they were for the pioneer who at least had a use or market for the raccoon's furry pelt.

The climate is healthful and ever-changing with an extreme high of 90 to 100 degrees at short intervals in summer to a rare spell of 30 degrees and more below zero in winter. Rainfall is average although the long periods of drought, or overcast weather lasting a week or more, have firmly convinced some that atomic tests have caused atmospheric changes in spite of scientific assurances to the contrary.

Autumn comes to delight us, even those who profess to dread it because of bleak days that follow before winter snows arrive to soften the landscape. This season is cherished as an annual gift of God to awe us with its beauty of changing colors that soar in brilliance to a peak of vivid scarlet and gold, with a muted tinge of purple over all, when the turning leaves of hardwood trees blend with the variant shades of neighboring evergreens to parade their glory before our admiring eyes. The sturdy maple becomes a blazing beacon and the delicate birch a golden flame above its milky trunk. It is all too brief, stealing upon us gradually in late August and reaching gorgeous perfection in early October. Exile and tourist come to view the loveliness. We never tire of it and eagerly await this miracle of nature which is particularly beautiful on the hills of Corinth, giving us courage to endure the long winter months ahead just as it did the five Dearborn Brothers from New Hampshire when they looked out from their broad acres above Goose Green and rejoiced that the "West" they were seeking had been reached.

Records of winters long past give an impression of prolonged periods of intense cold, great depths of snow that isolated neighbors, and a season six months long. Snow can come in late October and stay until April as it did in the unusually severe winter of 1963, piling up to the eaves and crashing in the roofs of barns and sheds with its weight, or delay its appearance until mid-December or early January. These green winters meant an unhealthy season and a full graveyard to our forebears, and they are disliked today as unnatural when the modern virus in its hundreds of forms seems to be widespread and continuous. An average winter brings snow in late November, mild thaws in January, deep snows in February, and a touch of spring in early March when the snow settles, days lengthen and farmers prepare for sugaring which usually starts around the 20th of the month. Then comes April when melting snow enriches the soil and replenishes the water tables before running off to brooks and streams feeding the Connecticut. Spring flowers hidden in the woods and along country roadsides, budding trees and returning song birds give joy to all as pleasant days lie ahead.

Road Commissioner Willard Martin and his workmen put away snowplows and resurrect equipment to repair dirt roads, or fill potholes in the blacktop highway along Route 25, East Corinth Village, and the ten-mile stretch from the Bradford Road through the south part of town to the Vershire line toward Chelsea. They have a total of 90.306 miles to hone and fill, 64.53 miles of Town Highways, 21.77 of State Aid Roads, and 4.006 of State System, maintaining excellent ditches and culverts for drainage. When the town "voated" in meeting on February 20, 1786, a tax of one shilling on the pound for highways, and wages of four shillings per day to be worked out by each property owner in labor to offset his assessment, our settler was accountable to John Taplin, Jr., Reuben Sanborn and Abner Fowler, Surveyors of Highways, if he failed to do his share to improve the crude tracks in his locality.

Corinth has lost steadily in populaton for more than a century, from a high of 1970 people in 1840 to a low of 775 today. Soil depletion, lack of arable land to support the growing family, and the lure of gold in later years, caused an exodus of the sons and grandsons of our early settlers who helped to open up the West, never to return to their native town. The town is still producing men of integrity whose love of birthplace is strong, and it continues as in the past to lose many of its young people, some of whom reluctantly locate in other towns and states providing greater opportunities. A few will return to work in Corinth but a greater number hope to "retire" here after their best years have enriched alien places.

New Jerusalem To Zion Hill

THE NAMING of a township was usually the function of the governor but oftentimes this privilege was extended to notable grantees who expressed a preference for a particular name. A town either bore the name of its counterpart in the mother country, England, an older settlement in America, or a family (Gage-borough.) A geopraphical feature was sometimes used, Fair Lea (Fairlee,) or a combination of names which Gageborough preferred in later years, taking part of Vermont and New Hampshire to form Vershire, the only town of such distinctive title in the world. Like naming the tag-end baby in a large family, Gov. Wentworth may have run out of ideas by the time he reached township No. 126 and was agreeable to any suggestions.

Where did the name of Corinth come from? The controversy will never be settled to the satisfaction of everyone, although several reasonable statements have been presented and none authenticated. One descendant declared her ancestor handed down the tradition that it was taken from the Bible. The state historian, John Clement, wrote in May, 1953, he thought the name was taken from the ancient Greek city without any particular reason or choice unless it be that no other place of that name was known in Colonial America. Research has led to the conclusion that the name more likely was linked with Corrinth (spelled with two r's) in England; nearby was the family seat of the Carleton Clan who had lived here for more than seven hundred years when Edward Carleton came in 1639 to settle in Rowley, Massachusetts. While it was impossible to determine whether Benning Wentworth or any of the influential grantees listed on his charter had a connection with the Carleton Family, or Corrinth in England, this theory is the one preferred by the history committee. Corinth in Vermont did become the first of this name in North America, followed by sister towns in Maine, New York and Mississippi.

No saints came marching in to settle here unless it was in the section known as New Jerusalem which today resembles Hell's back acre more than the Promised Land. For the most part our settlers were God-fearing, law-abiding descendants of Puritan stock from Rockingham County in New Hampshire and Essex County, Massachusetts who gave so many interesting place names to the town. Certainly no town in Vermont has more regional names. Within a radius of ten miles there are nearly fifty, many of them still in use to designate a specific locality. A brief description is given of the more familiar ones for those who wish to explore, although jeep or shank's mare must be used to reach the abandoned places listed.

New Jerusalem, a beautiful glade famous years ago for its trailing arbutus and other seasonal wildflowers, has reverted to bleak wilderness. The first road leading south from East Corinth passed in front of the Maurice Page house, running high above the river to the glade about a mile away. Here it dipped sharply down to the juncture of the Waits River and Tabor Branch which for years had but a single bridge for crossing. The abutment of large stones taken from the river bed, a privilege granted in early deeds, can still be seen on the east bank from the vantage point of the cement bridge near the Texaco station. This road continued up the steep hill opposite the station, following along Taplin Hill until it came out by the Sinclair farm on Route 25 to cross the river and valley on its way over the hills to Bradford. Overlooking New Jerusalem is Moose Hill, named after that noble animal.

At the Center in the heart of town to which all roads lead is the first cemetery with graves of soldiers who served in the French and Indian Wars, the Revolution, War of 1812 and Civil War. Indian scouts and early settlers lie here in the shadow of the colonial Meetinghouse built in 1800 and incorporated into the First Congregational Church in 1820. Town meetings were held here for forty years in clement weather, or in the Robert Rowe tavern a few doors away. The latter building is still standing and it did a thriving business when there was so much travel on the Old Post Road. Nearby is the old Town House built in 1845 for meetings of the freemen and sold 103 years later to the Seventh Day Adventists for a church.

A few miles beyond is Cookeville, honoring Daniel Cooke whose extensive business interests included the manufacture of potash for which a brook and hill are named. The first small fort in town was built in 1779 on Cooke Hill overlooking the settlement, in a field owned by Dustin White today. At a special town meeting called October 16, 1821, the town voted $2.000.00 to have the County buildings established on Fort Hill at Cookeville, "providing the Legislature shall constitute and establish Corinth the County Town for the County of Orange." By voting a larger sum of money Chelsea retained the county seat where it has been located since 1796. Since 1948 town meetings have been held here in the Corinth Academical Institute and Grammar School building erected in 1846, which also houses a community hall on the second floor and masonic headquarters on the third. Facing it is Cookeville School with the town clerk's office at the rear of the building; to the left is the beautiful colonial mansion, unique for its type of architecture, built by Daniel Cooke for a home and Inn in 1800.

East Corinth in the northeast corner of town is the largest hamlet today, unflatteringly referred to as Slab City, dating back to the era when extensive lumber operations stripped the surrounding hills of timber. Time and nature have healed the ugly scars. On old deeds it was called Hemlock City, and even earlier Taplin Village or Taplin Mills when Col. John Taplin developed this area with his son, Gouldsburn, establishing over a period of years starting in 1783 grist, fulling, clover and saw mills, potashery, distillery and starch factory.

The Corner, also known locally as Heath after Moses, Abel, Joseph and families who attained prominence here, was once the most prosperous and largest community in the whole town, located in the extreme southwest corner. Mail addressed to Heath reached its destination for years until the post office was discontinued and rural delivery took over. Joseph Fellows at the age of nineteen was the first to settle here in 1781, clearing his land during the months of warm weather and returning to his home in Salisbury, Massachusetts for the winter where he resumed his occupation of fisherman. The road to his nearest neighbors four miles away was merely a trail of marked trees. It was a lonely life except for weekends which were spent with the family of his cousin, William Fellows, who lived in the back part of Newbury bordering on Corinth. Here washing and baking were done for him until William moved on to a large tract of land near Joseph's clearing in 1784. In 1788 his friend, Abel Jackman, a soldier of the Revolution who was stationed at West Point at the time of Benedict Arnold's "defection to the British," bought land east of him and followed the pattern of work established by Joseph. They were married on the same day, January 30, 1791, in the Congregational Church at Salisbury, Massachusetts and brought their brides to the log cabins prepared for them in the wilderness.

Joseph, William and a few neighbors built a sawmill that same year below the union of three small streams in the meadow and the first boards sawn were used for the frame house Joseph provided for his bride in 1792. The house is now owned by Robert Osgood and is the oldest building in existence in this part of town. It is near the geographical center of Orange County. The neighbors included Benjamin Brown, John Brown 2nd, Ezra Sleeper, Charles Ward, Josiah Rollins, and Richard Smith who built the first two-story house, adding ells and barns until he had the largest block of farm buildings in town. All were destroyed by fire in October of 1859. Eleanor Porter, wife of John Porter whose ancestors located at the Corner, was a famous author whose "glad" books, "Pollyanna" and "Just David," provided as much pleasure to the residents as her occasional visits to this locality until her death in 1920.

Southeast of Meadow Meetinghouse on the road to Chelsea the first left-hand turn leads to South America Bridge and over the mountain to West Fairlee beyond. Years ago school was held for some time in one room of the Comstock house where a young teacher startled her pupils by announcing that they lived on the continent of South America, nor was she convinced otherwise until a doubting lad insisted she get out the map to prove her statement. Her tenure may have been short but the name for this section will always be South America.

The Oregon at the west end of town received its name when many young men left to make their fortunes in the northwest after hearing so many tall tales of the extent of lumber operations there. Farms became abandoned and trees grew to great size in this vast area between Chubb Hollow and The Burrough. This wilderness is referred to as "The Oregon" on early deeds and by present-day lumbermen.

The Borough or Burrow is reached by taking the first turn to the right beyond the West Corinth Cemetery on the Washington Road. Well-protected from winds and storms by the hills surrounding it, the sheltered settlement was given an appropriate name by the pioneers who located here. Now it is guarded by isolation and solitude.

Chubb Hollow, in the northwest part of town between Maplewood and East Orange, was named after a prosperous family whose large colonial house with single square chimney and eight fireplaces occupied a prominent place in the valley. Several other farms were located here, one of them being the home of the Colby Family who owned land in the Hollow from 1799-1954. India wheat for hog feed and thousands of bushels of large coarse potatoes 15 to 18 inches long, called Californias, were raised in soil that was never plagued with witch grass or destructive insects until 1880. The potatoes, considered inedible, were raised for the sole purpose of supplying the starch factory on the Corinth-Orange line where they were grated and dried for shipment during the golden age of prosperity and growth. Stedman Chubb, grandson of John who came from Charlton, Massachusetts in 1790 to the Hollow, learned the trade of mason and in later years rebuilt and enlarged the Fairbanks Scale Works, the Academy, and the Athenaeum while residing in St. Johnsbury. In 1880 he returned to Barre, a year later buying the Currier property, known earlier as "the Ripley Farm." from his wife's family where he raised full-blooded Jersey cattle. In 1884 he presented Barre with two acres of land in the center of the city for a public park, laying out lots around it for the construction of fine homes. Currier Park today is one of the attractive features of the City of Barre and a permanent memorial to a country boy from Corinth.

Pike Hill, which gave its name to the productive copper mines in operation from the late 1850's through World War I, is located in the north part of town. Daniel Pike farmed here from 1800 until his death in 1847. Shortly thereafter his farm and other adjoining lands were purchased by New York interests who soon developed an active community with mills, dormitories, boarding houses, tenements, stores and school to accommodate the miners and their families who numbered at times into the hundreds. At one time nearly one hundred children attended the Pike Hill School which disappeared years ago. A fire on June 12, 1960, completely destroyed the last decaying building, a boarding house, and vegetation is rapidly reclaiming the land.

About one mile away from the mines was Swab Stick where the miners gathered soft wood branches to clean out holes when they were drilling until improved equipment ended this primitive method. Even now deer hunters are very familiar with the place and name of Swab Stick.

The Rabbit Track was originally a path connecting the Brook Road leading to the Center with Goose Green. Eventually it was widened for passage of a horse and wagon with bushes growing so thickly along either side that it was impossible for teams to meet and pass. The air is no longer filled with blasphemy here since the road was widened years ago for two-way traffic.

Bear Notch can be reached by taking the back road leading from the Wayland Jordan Farm in South Corinth to West Fairlee and Vershire. An explanation is not needed for the derivation of the name as the region is still wild country providing sanctuary for bear and other animals. Bear Notch was the meat basket of our early settler as he rarely failed to find game of some kind here. When logging was done the logs were drawn to the top of the steep ledges by oxen and chains unhitched so the timber could be shoved over the edge for faster delivery to the sawmill. This method of skidding ended when a pair of oxen was dragged to its death along with a log of great size.

Robie District and Robie Hill were the ancestral acres of Edward and Ichabod Robie and other relatives of that name who located on land between the Center and Pike Hill mines. Years before Ichabod came here from Chester, New Hampshire, while still a young lad he and his father, John, were captured by Indians. His father was slain and scalped and Ichabod taken to Canada as hostage. The chief's squaw spoke of him as her "poor little white boy" and kept him from starvation by smuggling corn cakes which she hid under chips behind a stump. Ichabod was a fine cabinet maker and built beautiful bedroom sets and dressers with hand carving in his shop at the foot of Robie Hill, collectors' items today. He later built a shop nearer his house and it still stands below the Nellie Monroe residence. His brother, Emerson, followed in his footsteps, adding tubs and boxes which were in great demand by the farmers.

Zion Hill lies between Cookeville and the Robie District and one would expect people living here were strong in their religious beliefs, which is true. It was also famous for its centenarian, Mrs. George Wilson, daughter of Ichabod Robie, who not only celebrated her sixtieth wedding anniversary with her spouse in 1899, but also her 100th birthday on April 4, 1912, still proficient in the art of lace making without the use of glasses. The ox team and spirited horse were familiar to her but the comparatively new horseless carriage was a novelty which she consented to try on her natal day. Commenting on her ride she puzzled about the absence of a horse to draw the vehicle when the proud owner boasted of its horsepower.

Between the Robie District and Corinth Center is Towle Mountain. Brackett Towle settled here in 1779 and was lonesome when three of the Towle Brothers left for the West never to return again. Brackett also owned fifty acres of land at the Corner which he sold for 22 pounds, 10 shillings in 1788, describing it as running along the road by Fellows land toward the fort (built seven years earlier and larger than the first one.) With the opening of the West and discovery of gold many others followed after the Towle Brothers in later years, sending back word that any man who had gumption enough to get there would be assured of employment as Corinth men were in demand as excellent workers.

Cilley Flat, between East Corinth and Bradford town line, was named after Elisha Cilley who was the envy of other early settlers who found their land hillier than his. For years great bands of gypsies camped on the Flat for a few days each summer, arriving on horseback at first, then with teams, and at the last in automobiles. They planned their arrival to coincide with the East Corinth Fair which drew hundreds of people from nearby towns until it was discontinued in 1908. They were not allowed to swap horses on the fair grounds and would lure away prospective customers by inviting them down to their encampment for a drink of hard liquor which was banned in the town. The shrewd farmer did not often get the short end of a deal as his Yankee cunning was as keen as their slyness, but when he did the gypsies departed quietly in the night before violent physical action could be taken.

Garden Hill is the second highest point in town; and from its summit in western Corinth can be seen Canada, New Hampshire, New York and distant Vermont scenes on a clear day. It is said that 160 mountains can be seen from here with field glasses. A man and not a garden gave his name to this scenic elevation.

It Is Not Every Man's Lot to Gain Corinth

ON ROWLAND HILL, in later years known as Town Hill, lived descendants of Richard Rowland who cleared his acres in 1788. The land remained in the family for five generations until the death of Rowland Day in March, 1963, at the age of eighty-six. Rolla supplied much information which aided greatly in compiling this history. As he was a bachelor without direct heirs his property was sold at auction and important documents purchased for the historical room the committee hopes to establish in the future. From his hilltop where the log cabin stood until replaced by a low-framed farmhouse standing a few rods westerly, the scenery is superb. Pike Hill Road leads to the old Rowland place.

The frog pond that gives its name to Frog Pond Hill lies to the right of the road leading up to Taplin Hill past the old fair grounds near East Corinth. Frogs peep as loudly today in the spring as they did when the first Taplins climbed the hill to their farms and used the name to describe land boundaries.

Beyond lies Taplin Hill covering a wide farm area settled by Col. John Taplin and his six sons. He lived at the highest point on the hill, the Van Bree property and Karl Carter land in part, and by blowing on a ram's horn could summon his sons from their widespread farms if an emergency arose. The name of Taplin Hill is as old as the Town of Corinth.

Beech Hollow is a basin situated on the Topsham-Corinth border formerly filled with beech trees with a footpath running through it. The road to Pike Hill out of Waits River leads to it in a spot lonely and deserted. In later years packs of wild dogs roamed the Hollow and the name was corrupted to Bitch Hollow.

The most beautiful cemetery in town lies on a hill in Windy Acres where the wind blows strongly in summer and winter. It is found in South Corinth and the grass-grown track across from the Alden Slack Farm approaches the base of the hill. The Munns and Rowells settled on Windy Acres, giving their names to the family cemetery which is covered with a deep carpet of moss and surrounded by cedar trees. An excellent fence of stone posts and iron piping sets off the small inclosure. There are not many graves here but all are free of weeds and the stones well-preserved, with the exception of a few which are crumbling and the lettering worn away. Several infants are buried here and memorialized in the words "Happy infant early blest, Rest in peaceful slumber, rest." This cemetery is a place of quiet beauty.

Journey's End is more or less isolated a few miles beyond the old Corinth Corner Schoolhouse and was given its name by a group of ministers from New York, Massachusetts and Connecticut who purchased the property nearly thirty years ago for a summer camp for their families. There are a few dozen cottages here now and complete privacy. For some years mail was delivered by rural route out of Cookeville until the road from Chelsea was repaired for their convenience.

Beyond Cookeville lies West Corinth which not only had a post office more than one hundred years ago but stores, grist and saw mills for the accommodation of the large community. Parades and fireworks marked the Fourth of July celebrations held here which drew people from all over town several generations ago. The First Baptist Church was organized here before 1800 and the first crude building gave way eventually to an imposing structure built about 1855. In recent years the steeple was removed and the building sold for a barn which is still in use.

Sunday School Picnic at West Corinth

Maplewood, a rambling hotel that contained forty-two rooms, an open air pavilion with hardwood floor at the rear for programs and dancing, swimming pool and bowling alley, was developed by Eugene Darling, grandson of Samuel Darling who settled on land between Pike Hill and West Corinth in the early 1800's. Mr. Darling was a college professor before establishing a very successful law practice in New York City where he conceived the idea of expanding the family homestead into a summer resort for students in need of tutoring, and other boarders from the city. From 1886 on he made continual improvements and the fame of Maplewood grew as guests, some of them famous in the theatrical and business world, poured in from all over the country. The students, all boys, organized a fine baseball team that took on challengers from miles around and drew big crowds to their games in the 1890's and early 1900's. After the death of Mr. Darling the place changed hands numerous times, gradually falling into disuse until its destruction by fire on September 1, 1958. Many old cellar holes can be found in this vicinity as mute reminders of a once lively settlement.

The Maplewood Inn

Dearborn Hill, Town Farm Hill and Turkey Hill are all part of the broad elevation stretching above Goose Green southward for miles. The five Dearborn Brothers, their married sister and husband, Winthrop Green, mounted on horseback, set out for the West from their Weare, New Hampshire home in 1809, stopping at Goose Green to camp overnight. All were so impressed with their surroundings and the friendliness of the people that then and there they agreed they had reached the West and bought land adjoining each other above the Green, one brother's acreage spilling over into Vershire.

Old Town Farm on Dearborn Hill

At town meeting on October 27, 1851, the town voted $3,000.00 to purchase a farm for the purpose of keeping the paupers under one roof, electing George Little, James Doe and Joseph Knight, Jr. as a committee. Previous to this time the poor had been bid off at town meeting, the able-bodied going at a much lower yearly rate than the old and sickly who required more care and could not work. Up until 1800 when the first Overseer of the Poor was elected, it was customary to warn paupers out of town. The Town Farm was in existence into the 1900's when it was decided it was cheaper to board out the needy or support them at home. The farm is now the vacant Jauhola Place but numerous barns and outbuildings have disappeared.

From the time it was first settled this section became known as Turkey Hill when large flocks of these birds were raised and driven to Boston markets. Sheep, hundreds of them, were also raised here and driven to the brook near the Wayland Jordan Farm to be washed before shearing.

Mount Tug was great blackberry country, Corinth people taking pails and buckets into this hilly patch beyond South America to pick bushels of the fruit for home use and public markets. Evergreen grew abundantly and that too was pulled up in the late fall and stuffed into burlap bags for shipment to Boston and New York for Christmas wreaths. These outings were pleasant and brought in extra money for farm families. The origin of the name is not known but a sturdy tug or climb is required to reach the top, the east end of Mount Tug being in Corinth and the remainder in Vershire.

Between the Robie District and Hubbard Corner is Richardson Hill where Fred, son of Loren, used his dexterity to repair clocks and watches. He was always working on some new invention but never bothered to get patents on any. One that met with the admiration of his neighbors was the old drag saw he rigged up in his woodshed. Onto this logs were rolled from the dooryard, the motor started up to cut the log into blocks for splitting and then the pieces went along a track to the woodbox beside the kitchen stove.

Leitch Hill is a deserted place today between Maplewood and Chubb Hollow and is remembered for the tragic story of pretty Betsy Leitch who begged the doctor for an ointment to treat the few spots that appeared on her lovely face. He complied, warning her to apply it lightly with a feather to the blemishes only. Betsy figured if a little would do good a lot would surely make her complexion flawless, and spread it thickly all over her face where it remained for hours to do a thorough job of healing. Perhaps she was allergic to the mysterious concoction as her face swelled to inhuman proportions. When the swelling finally subsided her skin was flabby and full of wrinkles, her beauty ruined. From then on she rarely appeared in public but did serve as midwife for years to support herself. The poor creature smoked a pipe for comfort and always kept a light burning in the window every Saturday night in the forlorn hope that some one would call.

McCrillis Hill was settled by Robert McCrillis, a soldier of the Revolution who fought at Bunker Hill and Saratoga. His sons, Daniel and Evans, built the David Locke House and Smith Place. He and members of his family are buried in the private cemetery, neglected and all but hidden by trees, with never a flag placed on his grave on Memorial Day, as is customary in other graveyards in town. One is intrigued and saddened by the verse inscribed on the tombstone of Aaron who died November 6, 1835, at the age of 21 years: "It was this dear son who died so far from home, Was laid five days in a dark tomb. Then taken out by his father and brother dear, Brought two hundred miles and buried here." The Pike Hill Road out of Waits River is the easiest way to reach McCrillis Hill.

Three families of Magoons lived on Magoon Hill to the left of the road from Cookeville to West Corinth. The brothers were always playing tricks, trying to outsmart one another. Moses invited Silas to Thanksgiving Dinner one year, first appropriating one of Silas' prize turkeys without his knowledge. It was a fine dinner and Silas was grateful, insisting that Moses and family be his guests at Christmas when a fine saddle of mutton was served, obtained from one of Moses' valuable sheep. The brothers considered it a great joke and repeated the tale for years.

Jewell Hill in the southern part of town near the Corner is one of our steepest hills, hard to navigate in icy weather and continually causing trouble for state engineers who cannot seem to correct its tendency to slide toward the river below. It has caused trouble from the days of ox teams. At its summit is a fine picnic area which is frequently used for club barbeques and family gatherings. On a diagonal line across the valley from it is old Fort Wait on Hurricane Ridge, built in 1781 to protect the surrounding countryside from forays by bands of British and Indians from Canada during the Revolutionary War. Scout patrols were sent out to guard the Connecticut and Onion River (Winooski) Valleys from surprise attack.

The Meadow in the southern part of town was and is a prosperous farm section. Christopher Avery tilled his fertile acres in this broad valley and was largely responsible for the building of the South Meadow Church, or Meadow Meetinghouse, in 1838. Lyceums were organized by John Chapman for discussion of agricultural problems, a forerunner of Farm Bureau and Home Demonstration Clubs today. Susan Walker, a peculiar crone, lived in a log cabin near the church. Her sharp-pointed features and tall angular frame gave her a witch-like appearance which was further accentuated by her enmity toward others. She always wore a sunbonnet, long wrapper and carried a cane which she waved threateningly whenever a child neared her door. She was called "the old witch" by everyone in town but no tales were told of her riding a broomstick.

Beyond the Meadow toward the Corner was the Eaton District settled by Stephen and Peter Eaton who were skilled carpenters and successful farmers. Both men became active in town affairs, Stephen holding the office of justice of the peace for 46 years and serving as selectman numerous terms. He was also elected representative to the legislature, as was Peter who served his town three terms in this capacity. Successful minstrel shows used to be put on by local talent in the schoolhouse. The building was moved across the road in 1910 and still stands there, remodeled into a private residence.

Page Hill was the home of Reuben Page who located in the northeastern part of town near the Newbury line, about two miles out of East Corinth Village, in 1788. A lovely brick house with shoe shop nearby replaced Reuben's cabin before he died. The house is now renamed "Pine Plantation" by its present owner who runs a small nursing home for male patients.

Ryder Four Corners is beyond Journey's End on the Washington, Corinth and Chelsea lines. More than one hundred years ago George Ryder lived here. He built two barns, one in Corinth and the other in Washington, divided by the town line, enabling him to shift livestock and farm equipment whenever the occasion demanded.

the southerly part of town which years ago was called the Village Green. On a farm facing the Green geese were raised in yards because the manure was so rich it would kill whatever plant life it came in contact with. When full-grown they were driven to Boston markets, the drovers using horsewhips to control the flocks. By flicking the tip of a whip along their necks the drovers kept the geese from straying. Each flock was marked in a special way and this particular farm used green paint on the wings of the geese for identification. One day the oldest daughter, none too bright, was feeding the geese when a traveler passed by. The man exclaimed, "My, your geese are looking nice and fat!" The girl replied, "Yes, the damn things eat all before them and poison all behind."

A town, like a family, has a pride of name, knowing full well that character and reputation are developed by respect for civil and moral laws by past generations and a continuance of these principles by the present one. We can be proud that our town with its many localities has never suffered public disgrace, nor have its people been lax in civic responsibility. It is a responsibility not taken lightly as shown today by the active participation of its citizens in town and neighborhood affairs, the support of its churches and improvement of its schools, upkeep of personal property and clearance of town indebtedness, a minimum of crime and a maximum desire for growth in industry and population. If we are a little boastful of the natural beauty of our town we can in turn claim modesty in our quiet way of life.

We are told that the world is passing us by but after viewing this world through the many wonders of communication, the tranquility of Corinth has a charm for us unknown to the crowded masses. Progress is heartily desired, and it may be that our growth lies in plans projected by government agencies or, preferably, by industrial development to bring prosperity to our door. We have many advantages to offer with the advance northward of throughways linking us to city markets: dependability, ingenuity, pride of workmanship and a sense of values not reckoned solely in dollars and cents are but a few. Expanding industry and the protection of zoning laws are favored over the endless sprawling city, stretching southward from Montreal throughout all Vermont, which is foretold by enthusiastic promoters who chill us with this nightmare of a dismal future.

But whatever lies ahead, we will be most fortunate if Corinth remains in part a symbol of peaceful country life, upholding the qualities that have given it an honorable name.

"It is not every man's lot to gain Corinth."

Col. John Taplin, Soldier, Judge, and Tory

COL. JOHN TAPLIN, only proprietor to be listed on all three charters of Corinth, original and two confirmatory, might never have located in town if the colonies had remained under British rule. His contentment was complete in the primitive settlement of Newbury that was growng rapidly into the most beautiful and dominant village in the north country when he moved his family there. Here lived friends of education and culture who were leaders in the new settlement and had high regard for his ability and prestige. Although he sold a few lots from time to time no great effort was made by him in these early years to energetically promote the development of Corinth until proprietor Henry Moore of Chester, New Hampshire, made it his main objective from 1772 onward when rumors of sedition were already reaching the outlying frontier of Newbury. The Colonel's children were young and his family increasing until the birth of his last child, Gouldsburn, at Newbury in 1776. He may have dreamed that someday his sons would become landed gentlemen on the vast acreage owned by him in the neighboring town.

The Colonel was prosperous from the sale of lots in the several townships where he held shares and the salary paid him within a few years by the Province of New York for judicial services. Positions of importance were given him by appreciative townspeople who elected this natural-born leader to serve in several town offices. It was not until the tragic circumstances of 1776 that life changed for him and the hills of Corinth offered refuge to this genial man who was accused of espionage and warned to mend his ways or leave.

This father of eight sons and two daughters remains our most distinguished citizen regardless of accusations, with factual proof, that his sympathies lay entirely with the Crown rather than with the colonies in the decisive years of the American Revolution. It is true that his sense of loyalty would not allow him to take up arms against the King who had honored him with promotions in rank in earlier wars and generous land grants thereafter. At the same time he did not deny his older sons the choice of serving in numerous engagements against the British following the outbreak of hostilities at Lexington on April 19, 1775. He understood, even if he could not accept, the desire of the people for complete independence and never at any time wanted harm to befall his neighbors or his friends. It was a difficult situation for this American-born soldier who wrote from his home in Newbury on July 17, 1775 to Peter Livingston, President of the Provincial Congress at New York City: "The country seems to be very well united and firm to one another, and also in the cause of Liberty. I make no doubt but they will cheerfully join in whatever measures and directions the honorable Congress may point out from time to time."

Much of his early background is obscure but he was born at Charlestown, Massachusetts in 1727, exact date uncertain, although it has been given as October 8 with baptism following on the 27th. His father and grandfather were both named Mansfield Tapley, sometimes Tappan, earlier forms of the family surname. The Taplins were of Huguenot origin, descendants of the French emigrant of that name who settled in Overton, Hampshire, in England after the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, April 15, 1598. In 1746 he married Hepzibah Brigham who was but fifteen years of age, and resided in Marlborough when their son, John Mansfield, Jr., was born July 14, 1748. One family record states that Hepzibah was fifteen when her son was born but the year of her birth is given as 1731 so the marriage date above is probably correct.

Nothing is known of his occupation or activities for the next seven years when Massachusetts records show that he was an officer in the French and Indian War, serving as captain from March 28, 1755 to December 27. From November 29, 1755 to March 14, 1756 he is listed as captain in the regiment of Col. Jonathan Bayley. In August he was stationed at Fort William Henry on Lake Horicon, or Lake George as it was now called when Gen. William Johnson named it after King George II the previous year. A payroll dated there states that Capt. John Taplin was from Southborough, Massachusetts. Luckily for him he was not on duty here exactly one year later when the fort fell to the French under Gen. Montcalm who was unable to control the blood lust of his Indian allies as they butchered at least fifty of the British garrison before his troops put an end to it.

Unquestionably John Taplin was one of the most noted men of his day, serving as colonel in the British-American Army under Gen. Jeffrey Amherst in the expedition from Boston against the French in Canada in 1758 when the greatest fortress in the New World, Louisburg, overlooking the harbor on Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, was captured for the second time and entirely destroyed at the desire of the colonists. He was actively engaged with Major

Robert Rogers who has filled the pages of history with the exploits of his daring Rangers, Capt. John Stark, and Major Israel Putnam in the capture of French forts on Lake Champlain at Crown Point and Carillon (Ticonderoga) in 1759, and fighting their Indian allies then prowling throughout the entire wilderness territory of Vermont. His son, John, Jr., now twelve years of age and considered old enough to assume the responsibilities of manhood, accompanied him on expeditions and the war ended all too soon, from a boy's viewpoint, with the fall of Montreal in 1760 and the eventual surrender of all Canada to England. Both men are recorded as serving intermittently at Crown Point and Ticonderoga until the end of the French and Indian War, with occasional trips home to see their family and renew personal supplies.

They returned to Southboro for a brief visit before starting northward where all agreed to move when the right location in the wilderness was determined. The younger sons who cheered the homecoming of the heroes probably received a little fatherly discipline before the veterans departed for provincial headquarters where Col. John wielded personal influence to have his name placed on land grants. His efforts were successful when he was listed for the first time among eighty-one grantees to the charter of Haverhill, New Hampshire, on May 18, 1763. In two deeds of land here, one in August and the other in November, 1764, recorded at Exeter, reference is made to Col. John Taplin as living in Haverhill. It is doubtful if he ever moved his family to this town as the green hills of Vermont across the Connecticut River proved more attractive, especially when his name appeared on the Corinth charter.

No doubt they had already joined him when he was listed as Moderator of town meeting at Newbury on March 12, 1765, again in 1768 and 1769. He was also elected Selectman for 1765-66-67. The family appears to have lived near the site of the present Tenney Memorial Library on Newbury Street. Here his seventh son and eighth child, Johnson, was born on July 1, 1766. In 1768 Col. John's name was included with twenty-nine other proprietors on a deed of 2,000 acres of land to Benjamin Whiting, Surveyor, a confirmation that he had previously purchased charter rights of an original grantee to Newbury.

With the formation of the County of Gloucester in March of 1770 Col. Taplin was appointed chief judge of the first court ever held within the territory now called Orange County, receiving his commission from the King through the Governor of New York Province on the 17th of that month, and reappointment on April 10, 1772. He was not a lawyer by profession but a man of good sense and understanding of human problems. At the same time Kingsland (Washington) was named the county seat, although there was not a house nor an inhabitant within its limits. A village was supposedly plotted on paper near its center but the plan was never found so that meetings of the court could be held on the site.

Within two weeks, on March 29, the first terms of the courts of Common Pleas and of General Sessions were held at Kingsland with a full bench of justices present, also three of the four justices of the quorum, and High Sheriff John Taplin, Jr., who was first to serve the county in this capacity, receiving his appointment on the same day as his father. He was reappointed to this position on October 6, 1772, again on November 19, 1774 and replaced by Nathaniel Merrill on May 6, 1777. The Colonel was commissioned to administer oaths of office, also to serve as Justice of the Peace. It does not appear that any business was transacted at this first term of court.

The court met again on Tuesday, November 27, 1770 at Kingsland with the Colonel and Thomas Sumner serving as judges and Col. John Peters of Mooretown (Bradford) in the double capacity of clerk and justice of the quorum, or assistant justice. Action was called and put over on four cases, entered and adjourned to the next term on three others, and neither party appearing in the last case, nothing was done. The court then adjourned until the last Tuesday in February next, first appointing Samuel Pennock, Ebenezer Martin, Ebenezer Green and James Akin county surveyors.

When they met again on February 25, 1771 only Judge Taplin, Col. John Peters of the Quorum, and Sheriff John Taplin, Jr., were present. Their own account of this session is given here: "Sat out from Mooretown for Kings Land, travieled until Knight, there being no road and the Snow very Depe we travieled on Snow Shoes or Racatts, on the 26th we travieled some ways and Held a Council when it was Concluded it was Best to open the Court as we saw No Line, it was not known whether in Kingsland or Not But we concluded we were farr in the woods, we did not expect to see any house unless we marched three miles within Kingsland and no one lived there when the Court was ordered to be opened on the spot. All cases were continued or adjourned over untill next term. The Court, if any, adjourned over untill the last tuesday in May next."

It has always been thought this court was actually held in Corinth. After picking up clerk Peters in Mooretown they probably followed the Mahounquamoosee, which was the usual way of travel in the early days as its tributaries on the west led more or less directly to their destination. This Indian name, meaning at the place of or at the top of tall trees, was changed after 1760 to the Waits River in honor of Capt. Joseph Wait. It was he who saved a small band of Rogers' Rangers from starvation by hanging venison in a tree located near the fork of the Mahounquamoosee and the Connecticut Rivers when they retreated southward following destruction of the stronghold of the St.

Francis Indians above Montreal in 1759. The court never traveled without a compass and had some idea of where Kingsland was but the difficulty of snowshoeing through deep woods and deeper snows accounted for their uncertainty.

On May 28 they met as planned with Judge Taplin, Judge Sumner and Clerk Peters present to hear a bastardy case entered by the overseer of the poor at Newbury. As the defendant did not appear his recognizance, or sum of money put up by him, was forfeited and court adjourned until August. No record of this latter term of court was found.

In April, 1772 the Council of New York ordered the Courts of Common Pleas and General Sessions of the Peace for Gloucester County to be held in the town of Newbury during the months of February and August for a period of seven years because of the difficulty of convening in the wilds of Kingsland. The first court held in Newbury was in August of 1772 but in November the justices met again in Kingsland without doing any business. This pattern was repeated in February and May of 1773 at Newbury and Kingsland respectively. Following is the record of what was probably the last court held in Kingsland on May 25 of that year, attended by Judge Taplin, Col. John Peters as clerk, and Sheriff John Taplin, Jr.: "It was disputed whether two made a court, the clerk introducing the ordinance for the county and the comitions for the Sessions of the Peace and Court of Common Pleas. Proclamation being made by the sheriff the ordinance and comitions being read, the judges of the county (Thomas Sumner was absent) and justices (none present) were called but not appearing, the sheriff returned the following precepts to him directed: (Five cases listed.) The President Declaired all to rest or continue until Next terme, and adjourned to Newbury to tuesday 31 Day of August next att 10 o'clock." The last record of any court held by Judge Taplin is February 25, 1774, at Newbury.

When news of the Boston Tea Party on December 16, 1773 arrived during the winter, feelings ran high and before another year passed the sentiments of every man in Newbury were known. Veterans of the French and Indian Wars realized eastern Vermont lay in the direct pathway from Canada to Massachusetts and was most likely to suffer from invasion. Cause for further worry was lack of weapons in the settlement as less than half the men had arms and very little powder to defend the unprotected countryside. Committees of Safety were formed in all the towns along the Connecticut River and met at College Hall, Hanover, New Hampshire on July 5, 1776, to take steps for the protection of the frontier. One of their first acts was a resolution to strike a blow at the tories although the seat of war had been transferred by this time to the Hudson River Valley, lessening the danger of invasion locally.

On August 7 Col. John Taplin, Jacob Fowler, Col. Asa Porter and David Weeks were arrested and brought before the Committee of Safety for a hearing. Col. Taplin underwent the sad experience of facing old and intimate friends when he was interrogated, men who had admired him and welcomed his name on the confirmatory charter to Newbury when it was granted by New York Province on February 19, 1772. All were released on bail with the exception of Col. Porter who was sent to Exeter, New Hampshire under guard and confined in jail for some time. From now on these men would be accused of hundreds of plots of which they were usually innocent and unaware, most of the stories being circulated by people of inferior ability who took advantage of the troublesome times to further damage the reputations of prominent tories.

D. P. Thompson in his history of Montpelier says that Col. John Taplin retired during the war into Canada, leaving his son, John Taplin, Jr., on the paternal property in Corinth. He did travel back and forth to Canada on occasion and no doubt consulted with authorities there regarding conditions in this area. If he was guilty, as claimed, of continually spying on prominent military leaders in Newbury and Haverhill, reporting their activities to the British, or holding numerous secret meetings with strong tories in eastern Vermont, then he must have flown on the wings of an angel to cover the mileage involved and still have time to sell over 2500 acres of land in Corinth, in twenty-three separate deeds, between 1776 and 1783, several of them to loyal patriots living in the above-named towns. He was his own agent in these real estate transactions, traveling afoot or on horseback, which makes it probable he was living in Corinth most of the time during these years.

He either came to Corinth to live shortly after his arrest in Newbury, or about the time he sent the three sugarmakers over in the spring of 1777. He knew settlers were already located here, and others were busy making "pitches" for Henry Moore which they were paid for, or in some cases allowed to buy at a fair price. In fact, conditions were actually very quiet in this section of Vermont following the defeat of Burgoyne at Saratoga in October, 1777, and settlers poured in steadily to make their homes. The really troublesome years were 1780-1782 when the hopes of the tories were raised and their activities increased by rumors that leaders in western Vermont were negotiating with the British in Canada to place the state under the protection of England. Certainly life was more peaceful on their side of the state than over here when blockhouses were built in 1781 at Corinth, Cabot and Barnet for daily patrols between the towns. Col. Taplin was actually more involved now with intrigues than at any time since the outbreak of hostilities.

In October of 1780, a year before Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown to end the Revolutionary War, Jacob Fowler of Corinth, tory and faithful follower of Col. John Taplin, met up with a British patrol near Montpelier while out hunting. The patrol of 300 armed Indians was under the command of Lt. Horton who planned to destroy Newbury and capture what leaders might be found there. Jacob convinced them the town was heavily guarded by militia from miles around when it actually was poorly defended, whereupon they changed their route and went south to Royalton to wreak vengeance on that settlement.

It made no difference in this section of Vermont that the war was over and hostilities had ceased elsewhere. For people in the Corinth-Newbury-Mooretown neighborhood the most anxious months they were ever to know lay ahead when patrols from Canada continually scouted the area, keeping the settlers in a constant state of alarm.

Major Robert Rogers came in May, 1782 with a strong force from Canada to hold a conference with Col. Taplin and other men of doubtful loyalty on the hills in back of Bradford. All were convinced that Vermont was ripe for a separate truce with Great Britain, and recognition as a Province with special privileges, in preference to further ineffectual negotiations to join the federal union which was bitterly opposed by New York who was still smarting over the land grants. Their efforts to trap a few military leaders from Newbury were unsuccessful. Another attempt was made on June 14 to catch them off guard. Frederic Wells says in his History of Newbury, pub. 1902, that Col. Taplin traveled from Corinth to Newbury to ask help in protecting his neighbors from a party in from Canada, led by Captain Prichard and Breckenridge, who were taking some of them as prisoners. Suspecting it was a plot to capture their noted patriot, Gen. Bayley, he was informed that his fellow Corinthians would have to take care of themselves. However, Col. Thomas Johnson of Newbury, another patriot, expressly stated that Col. Taplin came to Newbury at that time to warn that Gen. Bayley was in danger (of capture.) His version is surely correct as it was in character with the deep loyalty of Col. Taplin that he could never conspire in the betrayal of a former friend. The following night the raiding party made another attempt to kidnap the General but he was safely away and they retaliated by taking a few less important prisoners along with them.

They passed through Corinth on their retreat north and forced the inhabitants to swear allegiance to the King, most of them doing so with tongue in cheek, we presume, to save their lives and property, or to avoid a forced march to Canada. The known loyalty of Col. Taplin to the Crown was the reason given for his neighbors being let off so easily. Col. Johnson stated that there were about forty families here at this time but there are no town records to tell us if all the settlers were brought in from their scattered clearings for the unwelcome ceremony. Thomas and Jacob Chamberlain, residing on the extreme border of East Topsham, were arrested the following day by a pursuing party from Newbury and confessed all they knew about the raiders from Canada, admitting they had lately fallen under the influence of the noted tory, Col. John Taplin.

In a letter two months later, dated August 28, 1782, at Quebec Col. John Peters, a leading tory from Mooretown whose lands had been confiscated by the patriots, wrote an enlightening account of his experiences to William Smith, Chief Justice of the Province of New York where his Majesty's forces were still strongly entrenched. After describing his escape to Canada through the woods he says, "The mills I built on Waits River (at Bradford) are burnt, my house is burnt, the rebels have laid out Mooretown and granted the mill privilege to others who have built on the same spot. A Mr. White who was at your house in New York in 1776 is Judge, next to Bayley, and is selling all Mooretown as fast as he can, sir, that which does not belong to the settlers. And he is cutting and selling all the timber belonging to the Moore estate."

He then states that Col. John Taplin has recently arrived from the region (of Corinth) where he has long been confined to his farm, from which he was obliged to escape with two of his sons following imprisonment on the family acres for assisting people in his area to get intelligence for the (British) government. The sons could have been Brigham and Johnson, ages 26 and 16 at the time, who escorted their father to safety, Johnson removing to Stanstead Plain, Quebec in 1796 to become its first settler. His next statement is incredible that "the three eldest (sons), who had families, are imprisoned." These sons, John, Jr., William and Mansfield were all patriots serving under the command of Col. Peter Olcott of Newbury, also as scouts under Capt. Simeon Stevens as late as May, 1781. Mansfield had seen service at Bunker Hill with John, Nehemiah and Henry Lovewell in the company of Gen. George C. Gilmore's New Hampshire Men. We can believe their imprisonment, if true, resulted from anger aroused in the inhabitants toward the Colonel, following their compulsory oath of allegiance to the King, rather than any disloyalty on the part of his sons. If they were temporarily confined after the escape of their father, it was probably on their farms and not within the walls of any jail.

The letter goes on to say that Col. Taplin was the first judge of the county appointed by Gov. Tryon, and that Col. Peters had his comition (commission) as well as his own and all the rest of the officers of (Gloucester) county, which he hid in the woods for one year when he sent and got them privately. In closing he laments that "I am not able to support Col. Taplin and it seems, although he has been here six weeks.....he is likely to get nothing, he is old, 61. I wish these troubles were at an end."

His wish was granted soon thereafter as just about the time English troops in Canada were preparing an expedition to occupy Vermont, the provisional peace treaty was signed at Paris in November, 1782, when Gen. George Washington declared all hostilities at an end, followed by the final treaty the next year when the British evacuated their last stronghold at New York City. Settlers were at long last free to work their acres unmolested by Tories, Indians or Yorkers. The one thing they could be thankful for was the fact that Col. Taplin was so highly regarded by British patrols that they never did any serious harm in all their trips down this way; no lives were lost nor buildings destroyed and for this he deserves credit.

Unlike tories in some towns of Vermont whose lands were confiscated, Col. Taplin was never faced with this hardship and his adjustment to peace times was made easier by the presence of his sons who were established on farms adjoining each other. The Colonel's farm atop Taplin Hill was running smoothly when he built up the village of East Corinth with young Gouldsburn, starting with the grist and saw mills in 1783. Long before his death on November 9, 1803 he turned the property over to Gouldsburn who rapidly expanded the village into a thriving community.

It has been inaccurately reported that the Colonel was elected to several town offices in Corinth but actually he never was asked to serve in any capacity, whereas his sons, grandsons and descendants down to present times have been steadily elected to one office or another. He was a tired, aging man who was content with the development of his town which he saw grow to a population of over 1400 before his death, the companionship of a large family, and the sincere respect of his neighbors. He died a loyal American.

The following story may not be definitely true but it does have a degree of probability which can be generally accepted by present-day historians. Assuming the event took place, if there is such an honor as being an original Vermonter among our early white settlers then Col. John Taplin ranks at the top of the list. He was present at the christening of the State in October, 1763, when Verd-Mont was the name given the Green Mountains. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Samuel Peters, the first clergyman to visit this part of the country, in the presence of Col. Taplin, Col. Welles, Col. Peters and many others who were proprietors of a large number of townships in the colony. The service took place on the top of a large rock standing on a high mountain, then named Mount Pisgah, known now as Killington Peak, because it provided the company a clear view of Lake Champlain to the west and the Connecticut River on the east, overlooking trees and hills in the vast wilderness north and south. Col. Taplin handed a bottle of spirits to Mr. Peters standing on a pinnacle of the rock, who proclaimed, "We have met here upon the Rock Etam standing on Mount Pisgah, which makes a part of the everlasting hills.... and to give it a new name.....Verd Mont, in token that her mountains and hills shall be ever green and shall never die." He then poured out the spirits and cast the bottle upon the Rock Etam.

Colonel Taplin and Hepzibah, who outlived him by twelve years, are buried in the old cemetery at Corinth Center, close to the sheltering walls of the First Congregational Church which was in the process of construction toward the end of his life. His epitaph reads:

"All flesh is as grass and all the glory
Of man as the flower of grass. the Grass withereth and the flower thereof
Falleth away.

The matching slate tombstone on Hepzibah's grave bears a more familiar inscription:

"Beneath this stone I turn to dust
But I hereafter shall arise
When he in whom I put my trust
Will bear me upward to the skies."

Grass may wither and flowers fall away but the name of Col. John Taplin will remain forever green in the township of Corinth.

Major John Taplin, Jr.

YOUNG JOHN TAPLIN may have ended his common school education at the age of twelve but under the tutelage of his father he received a far broader one to prepare him for harsh conditions on the frontier. For the next three years he was to lead a life that glues every modern boy of this age to a seat in front of television as scouts, painted Indians and colonial troops battle across the screen. Travel along the rivers, or through dense forests with experienced guides taught him to follow trails invisible to untrained eyes, and fully as important, how to survive when, as it sometimes happened, nature provided the greater part of his food and shelter. He learned all the tricks of self-preservation in numerous encounters with the enemy, red or white, always under the disciplinary eye of the Colonel or a trusted scout. All this training would be put to good use when he became high sheriff of the vast wilderness of Gloucester County at the age of twenty-one.

Association with hunters, army regulars and military officers fitted him for the responsibilities of leadership which was to be as strongly developed in him as in his famous father. A natural curiosity and a keen mind led to self-education through books and pamphlets at hand, along with personal observation that allowed him to master a number of skills instead of wasting his talents. At the same time all the graces of the gentry, so important to the limited society of his day, seemed instinctive in this youth who learned readily from the example set and expected of him by ranking elders. Although his military title of the moment was often used, there was nothing "ragtail" about young John who was early listed as gentleman, a distinction which applied to men of wealth and position only in colonial times, whereas his brothers were proud to be called "yeoman," evidently acquiring the name, if not all the refinements, of a gentility they regarded as high-faluting when they became successful farmers in Corinth years later.

John's religious training under Hepzibah, and the example set by his father who served on the committee in Newbury in 1768 to build a meeting house, never allowed him to drift into waywardness. All his life long he was attentive to church duties and his Bible was a constant source of education and comfort to him. Not only in ability but in appearance did the Major resemble his father when late in life he was described as a tall comely man, dignified in manner and courteous to all classes of people. He was too generous to hold on to the wealth accumulated over the years as he could never say "no" to those in need, whether it was deserved or not, and died an impoverished man at the age of eighty-seven on November 20, 1835, at the home of his son in Montpelier.

Like his father before him and the majority of young men in frontier settlements, John wedded young, being but twenty years of age when he and Catherine Lovewell were married in 1768 at Newbury. Catherine was the daughter of Capt. Nehemiah Lovewell who commanded troops in the French and Indian War and fought on the side of the patriots in the Revolution. John's sisters, Polly and Hepzibah, married the brothers of his bride, Robert and Zaccheus, and his brother Mansfield was wedded to the bride's sister, Betsey, to add to the confusion of family ties in later generations.

At least four of the children of John, Jr., were born in Newbury, the middle four in Corinth and the last four in Berlin, whereupon Catherine died on July 16, 1794 at the age of forty-six, just one month and one day following the birth of her twelfth child, William. Unless children were bound out to learn a trade in exchange for their keep, or scattered among relatives, early remarriage was not only customary but the only solution in pioneer times when a man was left with the care of a family. Within a year John was wedded to Miss Lydia Gove of Portsmouth, New Hampshire, who bore him ten children, one of whom was accidentally scalded to death in infancy. He was fifty-nine years of age when his last offspring, Susan, was born in 1807 and lived to see twenty-one of his children grow to maturity, marry and raise families of their own, although none attempted to meet the record set by him. John's own brothers and sisters had large families too which accounts for the statement that a pin stuck in any resident of Corinth whose family has lived here for several generations would probably bring forth a drop of Taplin blood as there are thousands of decendants from this prolific family.

Soon after John took over his duties as high sheriff he was ordered by the court to build a jail at the county seat in Kingsland which he promptly did, reporting the construction of a crude log structure a mile or more southeast of the present village of Washington, near the rise of a stream that took the name of Jail Branch. One early source of information says the jail was never occupied but another and more amusing account tells that at a session of court in Newbury a man was convicted for an offense against the laws of New Hampshire and sentenced to solitary confinement in the Kingsland jail.

Off treked the sheriff and his cheerful prisoner to the county seat, the latter carrying a few potatoes for rations, figuring his incarceration would be of short duration once he was locked up in the flimsy guardhouse. He politely waited until his jailer had made a good start for home before breaking out and being a kind-hearted chap, poked a few holes in the ground to plant the potatoes he would no longer need in his travels, figuring some other prisoner might enjoy the harvest. For years potatoes sprouted and multiplied in the prison yard, or so it is said.

John was an outdoorsman familiar with his father's holdings in Corinth, helping him to keep records of sales and purchases of property during his tenure as sheriff. He knew the layout of the town, particularly from the time legitimate settlers came in to establish permanent homes, and proprietor Henry Moore began hiring men to make "pitches" for him to accelerate the sale of land. The squatters who had appropriated a few acres for their own use were allowed to remain as cleared acres were more valuable than wilderness, then ordered after a few years to leave. The more industrious bought their land and some few remained to become respectable citizens. In lieu of cash the proprietors would accept its equivalent in merchantable potash salts or salts of ashes, merchandisable wheat, labour (rarely,) livestock or axes, to be delivered at a place designated by them. Other mediums of exchange were English pounds, L. M. (legal money,) shillings or pence, Spanish milled dollars, silver at six and eight pence per ounce and after 1792 the dollar in the currency of the United States of America.

For men accustomed to walking great distances in a day it was a short journey for John to hike from Newbury Village over Rogers Hill in a direct line to what would later be known as Page Hill in the northeast corner of Corinth. Here the track slanted above the Waits River down to the Bradford line where he would find men in southeast Corinth building up one of the earliest settlements along the gore between the two towns. In another twenty-five years the gore was proved to be non-existent but through this wooded hill country poured the Waits River Branch with a blazed trail following along the bottom of the ravine, across the river from the blacktop highway today. Further along toward South Corinth and up to the Center others were clearing land and building rough shelters for themselves or families.

A few early deeds from Colonel John Taplin are given here that brought their owners to town at an earlier date than stated in previous historical sketches, excluding squatters who always seemed to be ahead of the first settlers. Reuben Sandborn, or Sanborn, of Chichester, New Hampshire, picked up three complete rights (1,000 acres) between December 18, 1772, and March 3, 1778 at a total cost of twelve pounds, ten shillings, selling one of them at a profit of 98 pounds to Thomas Crook of Piermont, New Hampshire. Crook found cleared level meadowland along the river on the first 333 acres he owned, later building a beautiful brick mansion on one of the finest farms in town, now in the possession of Wayland Jordan, present town representative. Sanborn had previously sold 100-acre lots to his sons who were equally enthusiastic about making their homes here.

As there were several other families by the name of Sanborn located in town before 1780 it was impossible to trace down the Mr. Sanborn described so gruesomely in Hemenway's Gazatteer. Among the first settlers was a Mr. Wardworth, "a singular man who was sometimes insane." No Wardworth is found in town records but a Wadley and a Wadsworth are listed, the latter from Connecticut who years later in 1789 disposed of his property to Richard Rowland of New Canaan. Wardworth, with axe in hand, made a mark on the ground, warning Sanborn if he crossed it he would kill him. Sanborn took the fatal step and ended up with the axe embedded in his skull which was left there to prove Wardworth was a man of his word. The following day he cheerfully reported his act to neighbors who accompanied him to the spot where Sanborn's body lay. No steps were taken to punish or detain Wardworth as everyone knew of his mental instability. All drew a sigh of relief when he disappeared shortly after with the companion, a Mr. Foster, engaged to look after him. The late Rowland Day said the tale as told him by his grandmother, Mary Anne Rowland Day, granddaughter of Richard Rowland, had Wardworth living on Rowland land, the murder being committed near the present James Sargent Farm.

Then there was a Mark Sandborn of Haverhill, New Hampshire, who paid Col. John Taplin 150 pounds for 150 acres, "joyning" on Moses Harriman's property, on October 9, 1773 and another 60 pounds for 150 acres the following day, all in Corinth, County of Gloucester, Province of New York. The latter deed is pastoral in descripton as it included all the trees, woods, underwoods, rivers, streams, waters, mines, minerals, quarries, hawking, hunting, fowling, fishing, profits and privileges for the Quiet and Peaceable Possession of Mark Sanborn (both spellings used.) He did not waste any time settling in town and must have found a yeoman's paradise on earth if all the advantages listed in the deed awaited him.

Ezekiel Colby, yeoman from Newbury, bought his first land in Corinth from the Colonel on September 1, 1775, 100 acres for 30 pounds, and no doubt built some sort of shelter for himself and two companions before they came over in the spring of 1777 to spend a few weeks manufacturing maple sugar. Companionship was to be found and comparisons made of the sap yield among his neighbors living along the gore and near the center of town. Ezekiel bought many other lots from the Colonel over the years, later making his home on South Meadow, but none benefited him as much financially or in social rank as his first purchase when he sold the improved farm with buildings thereon for 300 pounds in 1784, using the title of gentleman in the deed. Hezekiah Silloway agreed to pay Colby for the farm with 1500 bushels of wheat which was always worth at least one dollar per bushel.

Ebenezer Martin was clearing land in South Corinth in 1775, Henry Eaton of Salisbury, Massachusetts, reaping the benefit fifteen years later, and families along the gore gave a helping hand when needed. While still residing in Newbury the Major worked when he could on his first 155 acres which his father finally deeded to him in 1780. This was typical of the Colonel as young Gouldsburn paid taxes on the East Corinth property long before it was deeded to him for one thousand dollars in 1802.

The area along the gore was so active the Major was delighted that his land bordered it on the south, although his home would be located high on Taplin Hill overlooking the main road leading from Newbury to the center of town. There his house still stands, braced against the sky and buffeted by winds and storms for 184 years, as sturdy as the Major himself. Over the years it received equal fame as the Capt. Thomas Collyer Farm, then the Squire Winthrop Green Place, followed by Alonzo Dickey until it passed into the Armstrong-Martin Family in 1869 where it still remains in the possession of descendants, Mrs. Florence Brainerd, her son Harry and his wife, Joan, and their four daughters Janice, Colleen, Carol and Virginia.

Oliver Whiting of Massachusetts sold a proprietor's share in Corinth on November 3, 1778 for 132 pounds, 15 shillings and did not realize the town was booming before this date or he never would have described it in the deed as lying on the westerly side of the Connecticut River near Cohoss in the State of New York, or in what is commonly called Vermont State, or wherever the town may be found, it being a town granted by Benning Wentworth Esquire, late Governor of the Province of New Hampshire. Plenty of settlers could have told him they had no difficulty finding their way to Corinth.

It was the gore that caused Major John Taplin, Jr. to move to the town of Berlin in 1787 where he located near the mouth of the Dog River. He became justice of the peace and their first representative to the state legislature. As justice of the peace he issued a warrant to Clark Stevens to warn the inhabitants of Montpelier to assemble on March 29, 1791 to form a town government. In the same capacity, on October 3, 1791 he performed the wedding ceremony of his daughter, Catherine, and Jacob Davis, Jr., the first marriage recorded in the capital city.

On October 1, 1783, a group of eleven men petitioned the General Assembly of Vermont in the name of Nehemiah Lovewell and associates, stating the gore of land lying between Corinth and Mooretown (Bradford) in the County of Orange (formed in 1781,) had never been granted by the state and they prayed that honorable body to grant said gore of land to Nehemiah Lovewell, John Taplin, 2nd, John Taplin, Jr., the 3d, Abner Fowler, William Taplin, Mansfield Taplin, Zaccheus Lovewell, George Banfield (first town clerk of Corinth,) Samuel Barnat, Walter Weeks and John Knickerbacor. The petition declared some of them had settled on their lands, supposing at the time of their purchases and settlements that the gore was contained within the lines of the township of Corinth, also that some of the petitioners had built houses along the gore and by their labours cleared a part of same from a wilderness to "pleasant fields and gardins." The petition was filed on October 19th and turned over to a committee previously appointed to consider the method to be adopted to survey several towns in the northen part of the state. On June 17, 1785 they reported that a gore of land lying between Mooretown and Corinth containing about 4000 acres be granted to a special committee with directions to dispose of same to the best advantage and benefit of Vermont. On October 27, 1785 the matter was again brought before the General Assembly who voted to appoint proprietors Henry Moore and Col. John Taplin a committee in trust of the disputed gore, requesting Governor

Thomas Chittenden to issue a charter thereto. The following day the Governor and his council appointed Nathaniel Niles, John Barron and Benjamin Baldwin, from Fairlee and Bradford respectively, to hold the charter under bonds to assure that directions were carried out.

This committee reported on March 29, 1786, that proprietors Moore and Taplin had not complied with the regulations outlined for them, whereupon the Governor and council again appointed Niles, Barron and Baldwin to hold the charter and dispose of the lands in the gore according to previous directions, namely for the benefit of the state. And that ends the matter as there is no further record of action being taken on the 4200 acres involved, meaning that Moore and Taplin were left in possession of the gore.

A lone petition was filed at the same time by James Akin, a dweller on the gore or strip of unlocated land between Corinth and Mooretown, who declared that previous to the formation of the State of Vermont (he was located in Bradford in 1771) he purchased a tract of land from Colonel Taplin who pretended to hold the land under a grant from New York. Akin gave the bounds of his 300 acres of land, more or less, where they adjoined Governor Moreses (Moore's) line on the east at the Bradford border, stating he had lived with his family on this tract for eight years and seven months and had made large improvements on same. He was willing to pay a reasonable granting fee if the honorable assembly would issue a grant directly to him to cover his land and protect him from being turned off his said improvements. A committee report read in General Assembly stated that there were about fifteen families settled on the gore and recommended that the petition be granted to Akin, but again the same action was taken in favor of the proprietors. This unfortunate man ended up selling about 270 acres on September 1, 1785 for 95 pounds to pay off his debts before moving to Newbury to live. Ill fortune seemed to follow him when Ebenezer White of that town recovered judgment against him in December, 1789, for 52 pounds, 3 shillings, 11 pence. As Akin failed to turn over any personal property to pay the judgment, attachment was made on his last 56½ acres in the gore which was valued at 43 pounds in partial settlement.

The third and last petition concerning the gore was filed fifteen years later on October 1, 1798, by James Lucas, Charles Crook, Reuben Crook, Thomas Collyer who now owned Maj. John Taplin's farm, Timothy Dustin and William Taplin who pointed out there could not possibly be a gore of land between Bradford and Corinth, as represented and claimed by the proprietors of Corinth, since the bounds of Bradford were set southerly by Fairlee, westerly by Corinth, northerly by Newbury, and easterly by Connecticut River; therefore it now appeared the land was within the limits of Bradford.

They complained "The Selectmen of Corinth in many instances have levied taxes on this tract which contains nearly or about 5850 acres (a considerable increase in acreage since the first petiton,) being that quantity of land over and above the actual limits and boundaries contained in the Charter of Corinth under the Great Seal of New Hampshire. The taxes collected by the Selectmen of Corinth on this land have never been accounted for with the Treasurer of the State, all of which taxes have been readily paid by the petitioners who feel it is a duty incumbent on all good and faithful citizens to contribute their full proportion of expenses toward maintaining and supporting a government by which persons and property are protected." They prayed that the Honorable Legislature would deed this land to the Town of Bradford and signed themselves as "faithful citizens." The committee appointed by the Assembly reported on November 1st the claims of the petitioners were not proven and recommended that the petition be dismissed, to end for good and all any arguments over the gore from that day to this.

The defeat of the petitioners drove some of them from town, first and foremost Maj. John Taplin, Jr., obstinate and proud, who apparently wanted a distance placed between himself and the Colonel to prevent further clashes between men of such strong temperaments. When he moved his family to Berlin in 1787 he knew Ebenezer Sanborn and Joseph Thurber of Corinth had preceded him by two years when they made the first settlement at the mouth of the Dog River where John located. Both men had left for New York the year before but Jacob Fowler, Indian scout and hunter, took over Sanborn's farm. He too could no longer live in the same town regardless of his long years of loyalty to the Colonel, selling his farm in Corinth on January 21, 1785, to be free to accompany the Major to the new location.

It could have been Jacob who found the body of Stevens, first name unknown, from Corinth who became a lone hunter when the girl he was in love with "gave him the mitten." Stevens, who had been dead for some time, was lying on a pile of beaver skins in his hut far from family and friends. His name lives on as it was given to Stevens Branch which flows through Barre City, rising in Williamstown and joining the Winooski at the northwest corner of Berlin.

George Banfield, or Banfill as it was sometimes spelled, who listed himself as boatbuilder, sold his 283 acres "with mansion, buildings and improvements thereon" in May, 1788 and eventually returned to Newbury where he died in 1838. He was not re-elected town clerk at the meeting on March 15, 1786 at the home of Robert Rowe, having served in this office ever since the town was organized in 1780. His replacement was Samuel Haseltine who still holds the record for longevity of service, forty years, with the assistance of his son, Samuel, Jr., toward the last. The shakiness of Samuel's penmanship was apparent as he aged, becoming almost illegible, until the appearance of his son's firm handwriting which was appreciated more than a century later by those working with old town records.

It was within a few years of Banfield's dismissal that the records of town meetings from 1780-85 inclusive were destroyed by fire, although officers elected at the organization meeting are known as they were recorded elsewhere. The late G. Leslie Parker and George Richardson who faithfully served their town in a number of offices for a period of nearly fifty years, agreed the records had disappeared before 1790 when fire broke out in the house of someone unknown who had taken the loose-leaf minutes home to copy instead of leaving them in the storage place provided by the town. At town meeting on March 11, 1788 "it was voated that the silectmen purchise books for the use of the town" and these volumes are still intact, the ink faded and brown with age. Other early papers, and records relating to the proprietors and their several plans of the town, including charters, went up in flames years later in the loft of the old Cooke store. The most important documents in possesion of the town today are the original Whitelaw map of 1790 and the Patent issued Col. Asa Porter when his name was included in the confirmatory charter from the Province of New York on March 2, 1772.

Hezekiah Silloway and Zaccheus Lovewell, brother-in-law of the Major, also joined him in Berlin in 1787, Silloway givng his address as Barlin when he sold his 200-acre farm on the main road leading from Corinth to Washington in March of 1790. Zaccheus sold his property piecemeal, 100 acres to James Merrill, Jr., in 1788 and another 127 acres to Charles Buckley of Montpelier on January 31, 1797, giving his address as Berlin in both deeds. Elisha Taplin joined his brother about this time, dying in Berlin in 1795. Until a grist mill was built the first settlers of Berlin had to come on foot, carrying bags of grain across their shoulders, to the nearest mill in Corinth to have it ground, a distance of more than 20 miles. It is very likely that Silloway and Lovewell led the way unless they stubbornly preferred stump or pound meal which was made by pouring grain into a hollow stump and pounding it with a heavy mallet until a meal of coarse texture was produced.

The Town of Corinth lost good men who had served it faithfully and well if re-election to office was an indication. In 1780 both John Taplin, Jr. and Hezekiah Silloway were elected a two-man Board of Selectmen to serve the town. It is more than likely that John at least continued in this office during the intervening years as he is listed selectman and surveyor of highway (road commissioner) in 1786. At March meeting in 1787 he was demoted to "tiding man," an office of no little importance actually as duties of tything men included power to arrest without a warrant, watching suspicious persons or strangers in town, detaining travelers on the Sabbath, keeping order at public assemblies and in the meeting house. The office included the honor of carrying a five-foot staff when on duty to prod the belligerent and unruly. It is doubtful if John ever assumed these police duties but it did show the proprietors had the power to drive from office those who opposed them. Their influence is understandable when more than half the voting populace was still indebted to them for land. Silloway was also elected tiding man at this meeting but his job as Pete Juryman of the previous year was given to someone else. Zaccheus Lovewell was another Pete Juryman in 1786, and re-elected in 1787 but did not serve. The only office James Akin ever held was tiding man in 1786 but his disgrace was the greater when he had the temerity to file a separate petition against the proprietors.

The ill wind that blew these capable men from Corinth was for the good of the Township of Berlin which had the advantage of their intelligence and industry to build a stable future when other settlers joined them.

Fort Hill and Fort Wait

IT REQUIRED three charters before Corinth began to grow into an active town of spreading communities along its mill streams, and two forts before the settlers were adequately protected from frequent incursions by patrols of British and Indians from Canada. It was the only town in Orange County as we know it today that was considered strategically important during the war to warrant a large fort in the line of border defense. British patrols invariably came this way for information on area conditions in their ceaseless efforts to capture military leaders in Newbury who were successfully blocking an alliance between Vermont and Great Britain for the establishment of an English Province. The settlers lived in fear of these insolent invaders who seemed to come and go at will as they met with their most reliable tory, Col. John Taplin. In the course of events he would unknowingly help to defeat England's last hope for a grip on American territory by refusing to betray former friends into their hands.

Lives and property had been spared thus far by the unwelcome snoopers but there was always the danger of complete annihilation if they came in an ugly mood. Provisions were openly appropriated by them from the crops of hard-pressed settlers whose nerves were kept at high pitch until Lt. Elliot from the Continental Troops in New Hampshire arrived to build a small fort in 1780 for their defense. No particular name was ever given this landmark but the place where it was built was called Fort Hill to distinguish it from other elevations in the vicinity. It was located high on a hillside overlooking the Center of town and would become part of Cooke Hill after twenty-two-year-old Daniel Cooke of Newton, Massachusetts came in 1788, during a period of financial failures, with fourteen dollars in his pocket to open a store in one room of the John Nutting house and start on his way to becoming the wealthiest man in town through shrewd real estate deals and expanding business interests. Daniel's father, Phineas Cooke, had given his personal fortune during the war to equip and entirely support a company of soldiers which completely bankrupted him in the inflationary years that followed.

Fort Hill, Cookeville - Where First Fort was Built in 1780

Here Lt. Elliot was stationed with a company of twenty men, reinforced by local volunteers when needed, who divided into small groups for daily patrols along the Winooski River and other inland routes used by the British and their tory spies. The inhabitants of Corinth and other nearby towns of eastern Vermont rested easier knowing they would be warned in advance of imminent invasion by a large force. In 1781 this fort was superseded by a larger, more substantial one but the stones of its foundation can still be seen in a depression in the Dustin White hay field, undisturbed all the years by farm vehicles drawn by oxen or horses in the past and the powerful tractor of today.

The second blockhouse, double in size and large enough to provide protection for local inhabitants in the event of attack, was built on an even higher hill near Cookeville to look out over the route through south Corinth often used by enemy patrols as they followed the Winooski River to the source of its tributary in the bordering town, or to the east and north if they came in that direction where a broad view of valleys and hills could be seen from the top of the ridge. It was called Fort Wait in honor of Col. Benjamin Wait of Indian War and Revolutionary fame, a brave and clever leader. Later a town was named after him also—Waitsfield—where he eventually settled and died. Col. Wait was assisted by Major Kingsbury and two companies of soldiers under Captains Abner Sealey and Charles Nelson in construction of the fort and made it their headquarters for the duration of the war.

This blockhouse was definitely built for defense and not domestic habitation although in appearance it resembled a huge cabin of logs and stones which could hold off an attack of considerable force when manned by a few alert regulars who were hardened to the dangers of frontier life through exhaustive toil and exposure to all kinds of weather. It was safer from bullets than a frame building as walls of the latter were not thick enough to stop bullets and window openings were larger. At some distance in front of the fort a blockade of upright stout logs, or thick stone walls eight to ten feet high, gave additional protection, encircling the whole when necessary. Fort Wait was manned by forty soldiers and was a central point for scouting parties to go out on patrols to blockhouses in Cabot, Barnet and Peacham, or along the main rivers of travel. Remnants of the wall with its crumbling mortar can still be seen high on Hurricane Ridge although all signs of the blockhouse that stood above it have disappeared. The ridge, strewn with stones tumbled from above, has grown up to scrubby timber to conceal the remaining two sections of wall as it follows along the edge of a rocky shelf where it leans at a dangerous angle toward the valley below. Its remoteness has probably saved it from vandalism. A relic of such historic value should be shored up and preserved by the town for future generations as a few years' delay means total destruction of the ancient rampart.

Many of the men listed on payrolls of the several companies in Newbury during the Revolutionary War lived in Corinth sometime after their first mention on May 16, 1775 as Minute Men under the command of Capt. Thomas Johnson, serving from eight to twenty days and continued to be active after their removal here. These men were Jacob Fowler, 3rd whose grandfather died in Newbury in 1785, Abner Fowler, Zaccheus Lovewell and Mansfield Taplin. We know Mansfield Taplin fought at Bunker Hill and was paid for loss of equipment and clothing in battle, also that Corinth men at the Battle of Bennington were rewarded with five dollars in plunder money. Whether any wore the Vermont uniform of green with red facings will remain forever a mystery as no details have ever been found to give us personal knowledge of their garb but it is more likely that most of them went in the coarse frocks universally worn at work.

Those listed as guarding and scouting in Capt. John Bayley's company under Col. Peter Olcott from April 1777 to March 6, 1779 were Edmund Brown, Jacob Fowler, 2nd who was a born scout and hunter with tory leanings until he had a change of heart, Jacob Fowler, 3rd, Abner Fowler, Nehemiah Lovewell, Sr., his son, Zaccheus Lovewell, Benjamin Muzzey, John Taplin, Jr., William Taplin and Mansfield Taplin.

Corinth men serving under Capt. Simeon Stevens from May 1779 to May 1781 guarding and scouting in sundry alarms, nineteen days each, were Edmund Brown, Zaccheus Lovewell, Nehemiah Lovewell, Sr., Abner Fowler, 2nd, Abner Fowler, 3rd, John Taplin, Jr., William Taplin and Mansfield Taplin.

On the payroll for several officers and men stationed at Fort Wait in Corinth in 1781 under John Taplin, Jr., Capt. of Militia, were Lt. Abner Fowler, 11 days scouting; Serg. Zaccheus Lovewell, 22 days scouting; William Taplin, 6 days scouting; Benjamin Sanborn, 5 days scouting; Bracket Towle, 5 days scouting. Capt. Robert Hunkins, early settler of Bradford, was also stationed at Fort Wait during this year. Jacob Fowler, 2nd had permanently shifted his allegiance to the side of the patriots by now and worked as scout for Gen. Wait for the remaining years of the war. The final payroll record from May 1781 until peace was declared, for scouting and guarding in sundry alarms in Capt. Frye Bayley's company under Col. Olcott and Col. Robert Johnson, included Jacob Fowler, Nehemiah Lovewell, Sr., Benjamin Muzzey and Reuben Sanborn.

A few other local men served in several engagements under different commanders but were not enrolled in Newbury companies. Many of the settlers who came here after the war were veterans of the Revolution whose descendants are still living in Corinth although only three of the original names survive. There are no Taplins of the name but plenty of the blood, and the male descendants of Reuben Page, David Moulton and Abel Jackman are the only ones left, namely, Maurice Page, Norman Moulton and Lawrence Jackman. Abel Jackman bought his land June 10, 1788, Reuben Page of Lunenberg, Massachusetts and Haverhill, New Hampshire, July 10 of the same year, and David Moulton whose address is given as Corinth, June 24, 1789. Norman Moulton is the only one living on the original acres of his ancestor. There is one other descendant living on land dating back to his Revolutionary War forbears, Eugene Eastman, selectman for the past twenty-seven years, whose acres came down through Joseph Knight of Atkinson, New Hampshire, who arrived in 1793, and his adjoining neighbor, Benjamin Scribner of Salisbury, New Hampshire, 1796. These families intermarried and their acres are now part of the Eastman farm on Route 25 toward Barre. Little did they know that the steep hilly pasture on the west would become the scene of the second ski tow built in the United States, developed by Mr. Eastman of the fifth generation, in 1936 and called the Northeast Slopes.

This old Reo truck provided the power for the rope tow at Northeast Slopes. Installed in 1936, the tow was 1,400 feet long with a vertical drop of 360 feet on 39 acres of land.

On October 16, 1781 five men from Fort Wait, Moses Warner, John Barret, John Sargent, Jonathan Luce and Daniel Hovey were sent out on a scouting party along the Winooski River as far as Jericho where they were fired upon by a party of sixteen tories from Canada. Warner, Sargent and Barrett were wounded, the latter dying forty hours later. He was buried near the bank of the Winooski River in the town of Colchester. The others were taken prisoners and carried off to Quebec where they remained until early summer before being released. In the quaint phraseology of that day "Moses Warren was made prisoner by a party of the enemy and carried to Qubuc and confined in Goal, kept prisoner until June 6, 1782. While prisoner was stripped of all valuable articles: arms and accoutrements, Blankets and compass." A letter dated June 16, 1782 refers to a deserter who told that all prisoners from Vermont were to be sent home immediately, since which time a number have arrived and say others are generally coming. Some say they were exchanged, others that they are parole (d) but have little to say about affairs.

A petition to the General Assembly convened at Bennington on one of the last days of January, 1782 was filed by Samuel Cary and Samuel Hovey of Lime, Vermont whose underage sons, Christopher Cary and Daniel Hovey, were captives in Quebec. Their petition read "both soldiers were taken when garding the frontiers of the State of Vermont at Corinth, being sent there by the authority of said state, and were volunteers in the company of Capt. Charles Nelson of Limė, belonging to Col. Waits Regiment. And whereas likewise, we their parents, have each of us a numberous and chargeable (costly) Family, to take Care of being poor men; Sd Cary has been Confined about four Months with rheumatism, and still continues, unable to work out Doors. and said Hovey has but little help." The Lime given as their address is Lyme, New Hampshire which belonged at the time of the petition to the Eastern Union of New Hampshire border towns which for a brief while were part of the State of Vermont.

When Gen. Bayley wrote Gen. George Washington on May 30, 1782 that Newbury and some adjacent towns stand fast (to the United States) the inhabitants of Corinth on the whole were proud to qualify for this statement of loyalty. Just a few weeks later their pride would turn to bitterness when they were compelled by the British patrol under Captains Prichard and Breckenridge to swear allegiance to a government they despised almost as much as that of New York who was powerful enough to keep them out of the federal union. At the same time the underage soldiers were more than happy as they found their way to the homes of their overworked fathers in Lyme. It cannot be that any troops were on duty at Fort Wait this particular day or the town history would include details of a pitched battle to stir the imaginations of school boys and girls.

Perhaps it is just as well the townspeople did not know that Capt. Prichard, foiled in his efforts to capture Gen. Bayley, wanted to leave a certain John Cross at Corinth under the care of Col. John Taplin so that if anything should happen to upset British plans, Cross could return to Canada in three days with the information. Then Prichard would immediately return with a large force to lay waste to the whole countryside, boasting he had 150 men and as many more as he might want at his command. Fortunately he was convinced it would never do to destroy this area as there were too many Vermonters who felt kindly toward the British and very likely would turn against them if such violent action were taken. Prichard was warned to avoid shedding blood which he promised to do unless he himself was attacked by Vermonters. If it had not been for level heads that made him see reason Corinth might have had a history of bloodshed and destruction similar to that of Royalton. Prichard never had another chance to threaten vengeance against the people of eastern Vermont as the provisional treaty with England in November ended all plots to bring the state under English rule. The history of Fort Wait ended then too as no other military records were found in regard to it. The town militia may have used the blockhouse in maneuvers for awhile but their company of infantry doubtless shuddered at the thought of charging up old Hurricane Ridge and settled for the milder exercise of drill formations on level fields.

Corinth's part in the Revolutionary War can close with the tribulations endured by the volunteers in regard to their wages. Thomas Tolman, paymaster to the troops of Vermont, informed the General Assembly at Windsor on June 18, 1782 he had to the best of his ability settled all payrolls for the year 1780, partly in silver, partly in Continental money and the remaining part in the paper currency of Vermont soon after it was issued. For the year 1781, in August, he made payment to Col. Wait's battalion for 3 months in the paper currency of Vermont and now they refused to accept any more of it. The soldiers were dissatisfied with what they had already accepted as legal money since they found it did not answer the purpose and value intended. Because of the depreciation of State money and lack of other money to take its place, Col. Wait's battalion was unpaid for the greater part of the campaign, except for the few to whom the State had made land grants in place of their wages. The last Assembly at Bennington had not advised him what method to use in showing the balance of wages due the soldiers, therefore he had given them certificates with the amount thereon. However, these certificates, or notes, bore neither interest rates nor date due and the men refused to accept them in their present form. Tolman thought that they would be more acceptable if the State would grant an interest rate of six per cent annually, from such date as would be fair, to raise their value to the holders, thus encouraging them to wait until the State was able to meet its debts before cashing them.

In other words, the money they refused to accept was not worth much more than the paper it was printed on and the men stationed at Fort Wait wanted coins of foreign countries which were the only ones in circulation until Congress voted in 1792 to mint the American dollar. The foreign coins of silver and gold they were willing to accept were not as valuable as they thought since counterfeiters were making them with one-quarter the amount of precious metal, and copying bills issued by the Continental Congress. Money depreciated so rapidly in value that the General Assembly in 1787 fixed its value to include sums stated in contracts dating back ten years. But this did not correct the evil even though the value of the Spanish milled dollar was set by law in 1778 to be worth two Continental paper dollars. By 1782 it equaled 72 paper dollars and kept rising. Those unlucky enough to accept paper money got rid of it at once before it depreciated again. Everyone had heard of some unfortunate soul who sold his property for a few thousand dollars in paper money and found he actually had a value of less than thirty dollars in silver. They humorously gave the name of shinplaster to this worthless paper money which was not guaranteed by established banks and banknotes. These were to follow years later after the people had lost their distrust for printed currency.

After the war ended taxes were high and money of real value scarce which enabled a few wealthy men to buy up real estate cheaply from those who could not pay their taxes. Such abuses finally led to the acceptance of farm produce as a medium of exchange for years thereafter in local markets, particularly wheat which was used to pay taxes and the wages of teachers and ministers. A man working for some one else could within a year or two buy his first one hundred acres with wheat he received as wages. Our own town records show that both wheat and labor were "voated acceptable at town meeting on March 15, 1786 when Silectmen John Nutting, John Taplin, Jr., and Jonathan Hadley were given the power to hire a minster for fifty bushels of wheat to have Priching (preaching) this summer, also that one shilling tax on the Pound for High ways" could be worked out by the taxpayers on the roads in their neighborhood in exchange for wages, fixed at four shillings per Day, to apply on their assessment. In 1787 conditions were even worse and the tax of a "peney on the Pound" for defraying necessary expenses of the town voted at March meeting was abated the following year and the few who had paid any part of it were allowed to apply the credit toward their taxes of the present year.

By reading early deeds one can easily list the handful of men who rose from yeoman to gentlemen of property in a few short years through the misfortune of others who were in no way responsible for their bankrupt condition. Again the town of Corinth lost good capable men when poverty forced them to migrate to other frontiers.

War of 1812, Militia and Fairs

AT THE CLOSE of the Revolutionary War military service remained a must for every man to protect the young nation against attack and the militia system, in effect from the time of the Pilgrims to defend the frontiers against Indians, was continued so that all would be familiar with military tactics and ready for action at any moment. Every able-bodied man between the ages of eighteen and forty-five was required to serve, excepting ministers, the physically weak, judges, millers and a few others. This was an improvement over the late war when compulsory service included ages sixteen to fifty in the training bands, and fourteen to sixty-five for an all-out alarm. In the few instances of a real emergency it meant that women and children with the help of elderly men were the only ones left to protect a settlement.

Service in the militia exempted a member from payment of his poll tax but he was expected to furnish arms and equipment, a requirement dating back to the outbreak of the Revolution when a volunteer supplied his own musket, bullet pouch and powder horn, blanket, knapsack and snowshoes for winter scouting. Many had weapons left over from the war, either their own or those provided from state funds after 1777 when Vermont, formerly part of the New York militia, declared its independence and that state refused to send further arms and ammunitions to its rebellious neighbor. This handicap was partially overcome through contributions from private individuals, borrowing of large sums of money and the sale of tory lands by the state to supply the necessities of war.

Corinth was attached to the first regiment, second brigade and fourth division of the state militia along with the towns of Fairlee, Bradford, Newbury, Ryegate, Barnet, Peacham, Vershire, Lunenburg and Guildhall - all considered large enough at the time to supply a company of forty to seventy-two men, headed by a Captain, two lieutenants and an ensign. Some companies eventually grew in size to one hundred men. At the head of the regiment was a colonel, assisted by his lieutenant colonel and major, who were elected by the captains and lieutenants of ten companies of one or more units of light infantry, cavalry and artillery serving under them. Many of the regular companies wore workday clothing but as time went on a few crack outfits became noted for the polish and splendor of their uniforms and performance, at great expense to their leaders and themselves. A description of the Corinth militia uniform cannot be given but if they ever got beyond their homespun frocks one can be sure the outfit selected was of simple, practical design. Before the militia system was legally abolished in 1847 it had grown to a total enrollment of over 26,000 officers and private soldiers, 28 regiments and 290 companies.

In 1785 John Taplin, Jr. was a major in the first regiment, a title he retained for the rest of his life. Captain of the Corinth company was Abner Fowler, Mansfield Taplin, lieutenant and Jonathan Lovewell, ensign. The state militia created many men of rank down the years who were proud of their titles as it was a considerable honor when the men of a company, or commissioned officers of the regiment, had confidence enough in one of their members to elect him leader. When the Major left for Berlin two years later he was succeeded in rank by a number of men but the only name known is that of Mansfield Taplin. Corinth men who became colonel of the regiment at some time or other were Nehemiah Lovewell, Reuben Stevens, Abel Jackman and Reuben Page, 2nd. As Corinth was settled largely by men who had served in the Revolutionary War it is understandable why so many of them rose to prominent positions of command in the state militia. Captains of the local company were Thomas Collyer, George Stevens, Ezekial Colby and Nathan Taplin.

During these years it was every boy's ambition to reach the age of militia service when he too might wear a uniform and parade with experienced veterans. At the Center, in the southeastern or northeastern part of town and at the Corner he could watch men drilling while the fife and drum corps had them stepping off in military style. The men were not only taught military discipline but a love and practice of martial music. In time Corinth had a fine reputation for its cornet band of trained musicians whose sons and grandsons would furnish lively airs for many an all-night ball or local hoe-down. There was the treat of June training when every company met the first Tuesday in June for inspection, drill and discipline, going through the Manual of Arms at a smart clip. The name and equipment of each member was returned to the town clerk but these records are gone so credit cannot be given to others who captained local companies over the years. Following the military review came the excitement of tugs of war, wrestling matches and other strenuous tests of strength to make a perfect day for boy and adult alike.

Then came the most thrilling day of the year, General Muster in September, when companies joined together for general review in the center of town. Within a few years the militia met at the old parade ground outside East Corinth Village and that great level field saw more military display than any other piece of land in Orange County according to historians. Each company had its fife and drum corps or band, sometimes both, and the hills echoed to the sound of music and shouted commands when the whole town, with its bordering neighbors, turned out to applaud these representatives of Vermont's military power. Picnic lunches and more elaborate meals under canvas for visiting brass, even booths to dispense sweets, surreptitious alcoholic beverages, doodads and knick-knacks were set up to wheedle a few pennies from the holiday crowd.

When war was declared between the United States and Great Britain on January 18, 1812, over British interference with American shipping and search of our vessels for British subjects in retaliation for the prosperous trade carried on with its enemy, France, the militia system proved worthwhile when thousands of trained men were ready and armed to defend the northern borders. Much of the fighting was on the Great Lakes and Champlain but there were plenty of land battles too that brought into action the militia of several states bounding on Canada. While Vermont was not particularly sympathetic to hastily-imposed laws forbidding trade with Canada, it was ready to defend the country and several companies of its militia were engaged in battle on Canadian soil. The importance of this Canadian trade was realized locally when four men from the northern part of the state, Messrs. Sanborn, Stone, Parker and Rice purchased a herd of cattle in the vicinity and started for home. Mr. Perry, a custom house officer living in Chelsea, rounded up a group of men and gave chase, overtaking them in West Topsham at the house of Dr. Richard Huntley where they took possession of the herd and started back toward Corinth. The owners of the cattle hired a company of men to help them reclaim their livestock and waited on a bridge near Corinth Center for their arrivel. A grand hassle took place when the cattle approached the bridge but the customs man won out. The cows were turned into pasture and guarded by members of the town militia for a few days before being driven away to an unknown destination. In the legal battle which followed it was decided the cattle were not subject to confiscation and the government paid the owners for their property.

Vermont became personally involved when a landing by British troops at Vergennes was prevented in the Spring of 1814. The Corinth militia responded to the call of General Macomb on September first when an appeal was sent throughout the state for volunteers to come to the defense of Plattsburgh. This was a cause they were willing to fight for and central and eastern Vermont sent its men by the hundreds to do battle with a large expedition of British troops from Canada which was on its way to invade American soil.

Sometime after his election as Captain of the company of militia in the southern part of town in 1801, Abel Jackman was elected Colonel of the regiment which office he held for a number of years. In November of 1812 he petitioned Gov. Isaac Tichenor to be relieved of his command and received an honorable discharge. When word arrived of the imminent invasion of Plattsburgh Col. Jackman immediately raised a company of volunteers, sending his oldest son to the home of Jonathan Jenness in West Topsham to warn him that all volunteers who could be raised in his town would be greatly needed. Jenness started at once for East Topsham and young Jackman raced home to march with the Corinth militia. Paul Revere's ride had some similarity to that of Jenness as he rushed through the countryside notifying the inhabitants of the emergency. He reached Galusha Hill at three o'clock in the morning where Edmund George joined him, each taking different routes to warn every able-bodied man to grab his musket and meet at the town house as quickly as possible. At sunrise fifty-two men were ready to march, stopping at the home of host Jenness in West Topsham for refreshments. By nightfall they were encamped in Montpelier and on the outskirts of Richmond next day when they met up with a man with handbills informing them that the battle was won.

In the meantime the fifty-five Corinth volunteers under Col. Jackman were on their way to the "seat of war", joining up with a larger party from Vershire with whom they united under the organization of Jacob Collamer, aide-de-camp to General French, commander of the second brigade of the fourth division of Vermont militia. Officers were immediately appointed. Among those from Corinth to be named were Peter Eaton, Lieutenant, John Clifford and Winthrop True Jackman, Sergeants, the latter being elected captain of the town militia in later years. As they passed through Montpelier they were overtaken by young George Sleeper from home who had been left on the farm to take care of the family during his father's absence. When he was asked by one of his youthful companions to go with him to war bare-footed George replied, "I will but I must first go to the house and get my boots." Being properly shod George told his mother he was going fishing and started out with his fishing tackle to catch redcoats or British soldiers, not trout or pickerel. When he joined the local group at Montpelier he exchanged his fishing rod for a gun and marched along with them to Plattsburgh, his father saying never a word in reprimand. The company was detained at Burlington for lack of transportation across Lake Champlain and by the time they reached Plattsburgh most of the British had left for Canada, to the great disappointment of the younger men who were hankering for personal combat with the enemy so they could join the ranks of seasoned veterans.

Records did not show if George shared in the bonus voted at special town meeting on July 17, 1812, when it was decided to raise the wages of the Minute Men if called into actual service, not otherwise. Each soldier was to have five dollars added to his wages for the month he was detached from companies in Corinth, same to be paid on his return or at the expiration of his actual term of service. On March 8, 1813, it was voted to have the auditors adjust the accounts of the Detached Militia respecting their Bounty and draw orders on the Treasurer for such sum. The war scare made the townspeople aware of the stock of ammunition on hand which had not been discussed in town meeting since September 2, 1800 when one hundred dollars was voted for a "storck" of same. On November 22, 1814 they voted to build a powder house or magazine, the committee appointed to make a draft and report at March meeting. The first report was rejected but the powder house was soon thereafter built of stone a short distance beyond the Center Church and burying ground, near the present-day parsonage, where it stood for years until the last trace of its shell disappeared about a quarter century ago.

The long years of peace following the treaty with Great Britain in January of 1815 saw the militia system gradually fall into disfavor as the old soldiers died and the new generatons lost interest. Laboring men and farmers resented leaving their work for several days each year to undergo long, tiring marches without pay. June trainings and brigade musters were described with some truth as being drunken brawls with rough characters being drawn to the parade grounds to encourage gambling and other vices. The commanding officer, teetotaler or no, was expected to stand treat for the entire company when it met outside his house on muster day to give him a personal salute. The temperance societies, now grown powerful, attacked the system, claiming young men and boys first learned to drink at these affairs. Parents heartily agreed that the militia was a digrace, blaming the increase in accidents to the careless use of firearms in the hands of intoxicated men. Riots and disorder disgusted sober men who began to defy the law compelling them to attend. The militia had served its purpose for better than two hundred years when it was repealed in 1847, ending the anticipation and pleasure that field days had provided country folk for generations until the system fell on evil times. After the Civil War the militia was reactivated on a voluntary basis with approximately 4,000 men equipped and paid by the state. The people were not to be entirely denied their few pleasures in life as the country fair was revived to encourage competitive exhibits of farm produce and home crafts by both men and women.

The New Hampshire Charter specifically stated that the town was entitled to two fairs yearly, the dates to be of their own choosing "as soon as there shall be fifty families resident and settled thereon, and a Market may be opened and kept one or more days in each week as may be thought most advantageous to the inhabitants." For years the population of Corinth had qualified the town to hold a fair and market too but it was not until September 10, 1796 that it was voted to have two fairs, one on the second Tuesday in October and one on the second Tuesday in June. They enthusiastically ordered the first fair to be held that fall at John Lovewell's and directed their chosen committee, Jonathan Tenney, Elijah Allen and Thomas Collyer to advertise the event in the paper published at Newbury, "The Orange Nightingale and Newbury Morning Star." The first fair must have been a great success as the same committee had charge of the one in June at the same place, which today is the large field on the property of Bryce Metcalf just west of his farmhouse. No further mention is made of fairs in town records so we can assume they were discontinued, or carried on by individuals who did not think it necessary to bring the matter before town meeting.

Cattle fairs or markets were held for years where horses, sheep and cows were swapped or sold, especially after Jersey stock was introduced about 1870. In fact most any property could be brought in for trade. The fair as it is known today in the few towns clinging to this pleasant custom did not grow to a large scale in Corinth until the 1870's or 80's when permanent buildings were erected at East Corinth for exhibits of farm and home products, stables for horses and barns for oxen and cattle. The fair generally lasted three days, in late August or early September, and the reason they died out in early 1900's was that the burden of planning fell upon a few citizens who finally felt unequal to the added responsibility and work involved. Cookeville had its fair and West Corinth too but the largest one was held at the old parade grounds, The Waits River Valley Fair, which in addition to the above buildings boasted a race track, floral hall, and dining halls, one of which was owned by the Congregational Society of East Corinth who extended their building thirty feet in 1894 to take care of their patrons. The officers were not confined to the environs of East Corinth as a number of them were prominent men in nearby towns who ably assisted the Agricultural Association during the many prosperous years the fair was held.

The last large fair held in East Corinth was in 1907 and a few spasmodic attempts were made to keep it going a few years longer but lack of interest and financial backing saw an end to an attraction that drew thousands of people from all over eastern Vermont during its heyday. Drills by calvary units from Fort Ethan Allen, balloon ascensions, high wire performers, the famous Corinth fife and drum corps and visiting bands, lurking gypsies, excellent meals in numerous dining halls, promenading and dancing, horse racing that attracted some of the outstanding trotters in Vermont and New Hampshire to compete for the generous purses, teams of oxen numbering as high as sixty, cattle, poultry of all kinds, and vegetables of mammoth size were but a few of the delights of the old East Corinth Fair. Cash premiums were awarded to cattle, oxen and steers, bucks, ewes and swine, honey, syrup and butter, fruits, grain and cheese, while in floral hall red or blue ribbons and small sums of money were given for oil paintings, braided rugs and bedspreads, crazy quilts and Log Cabin design, tidies, pillow shams and peanut men, painted china, toilet sets and fire shovels, footstools, paper flowers and home made blankets, splasher, feather wreath and pin cushion made of hair, fascinator, raveled rug and carriage afghan. Some of the items exhibited in floral hall seventy and more years ago are choice heirlooms today in the homes of the exhibitors' grandchildren and great grandchildren. These were the gala years when pleasure was still a home-made product and one did not need to travel more than a few miles in any direction to find simple entertainment.

In the depression years of the 1930's when financial stress was nation-wide a form of the early fair was revived at East Corinth under the dynamic direction of the late Harry Hunter when spectacular parades were held every Labor Day, followed by cafeteria-style dinner, simple games of chance, refreshment stands, baseball contest between the home team and a visiting rival, exhibits in the schoolroom and a dance in Community Hall to wind up a successful long day that saw everyone in the village and Taplin Hill co-operating to make it worthwhile.

On an even smaller scale the members of the East Corinth Congregational Church have for the past decade sponsored an auction, barbecue chicken dinner and baseball game on the old parade ground every Fourth of July that attracts many patrons from away. But the old-time fair with its varied exhibits and activities is but a memory of the past.

Early Settlers and Land Records

MUCH OF the early history of Corinth in the years of its transition from a wilderness to a bustling township can be found in the first few books of land records. Here are the names and descriptions of industries essential to its growth, many of their manufactures obsolete today; the years of expansion and prosperity, the cycles of hard times and exodus of settlers; the communities that grew the fastest and the men who profited the most.

Also recorded here are last wills and testaments, divorce actions, and contracts for the care of the aging and orphans. Indentures, mortgages and quit claims to land worked by retainers and squatters are given in detail. Tax warrants issued by the state for the purpose of building bridges and roads in town, or for the support of the Commonwealth, share pages with notices of Sheriff Sales, the plight of bad debtors, and auction of personal goods. Surveys of pitches made for proprietors or individuals, and land sold for taxes march along side of Fence Viewers' reports on pent roads and division of fences, details of new roads and abandonment of old ones. Valuation of stray farm animals picked up by the Pound Keeper, or expenses of farmers who pastured them until reclaimed, precede pages giving registered marks for livestock. These brands look like miniature signboards with varying notches to denote ownership . Sale of church slips or pews in the early meeting houses in town followed lists of freemen and children born before 1778. Tax warnings for the benefit of delinquent taxpayers, and entertaining estate appraisals vie with detailed leases of Glebe land from the Church of England. All these are but a part of the interesting mixture of information contained within the ancient journals.

The indistinct writings contained careless mistakes that caused hours of extra research to solve the discepancies, most of them due to the custom of scribbling memos on loose slips of paper before copying into books ordered by the town in 1788. Several of these memos are still in existence. An insight was given to social problems which were ably handled by individuals who shared the little they had with those in need until times improved, by the townspeople through local action, or the county court when it became more conveniently established at Chelsea after its removal from Newbury in 1796.

Property transfers dating back to February 10, 1764, six days after the first charter was issued, indicate the shareholders themselves were not too certain just where Corinth lay yet they were positive in loyalty to their Sovereign Lord, George the Third, as they always listed the year of his reign in deeds until independence was declared. They might describe the town as being either in the County of Gloucester, Province of New Hampshire, or in the New Hampshire Grants, westerly of the Connecticut River, back of the Waits River so-called, or back of Mooretown, even on the corner of the Township of Newbury without specific compass point to denote which corner. From 1772 onward it was placed in the Province of New York or New York Grants, then the State of New York until Vermont was organized five years later.

As late as 1781 Col. John Taplin referred to Corinth as lying in the County of Gloucester, State of New York, alias the County of Orange and State of Vermont. Another deed recorded at the same time by a property owner in Newbury gave the county as Cumberland.

Land was described as being located on the Gore, the Onion River Road, also along the Grate Road leading from Newbury to the Centre, or more definitely placed in a numbered Right and Range. To add to the confusion a lot could lie in a certain direction from the New Hampshire, York or Hazen Line, whichever survey lines the individual making out a deed preferred. Even worse were the deeds which allowed acreage to be "taken wherever some one else had not already pitched," leading to endless lawsuits in later years to exasperate landowners put to the expense of proving ownership and title. One can almost be certain that land involved in this type of deed was more than once defended by fist fights before reaching the courts.

In addition to those already listed elsewhere, there were many settlers who came into Corinth before or shortly after 1800 who deserve brief mention for their years of service to the town or their influence on the community in which they located.

The names of freemen listed as being here before 1778 were Samuel Haseltine, Silas Pearker (Parker,) Robert Rowe, William Bennet, Elisha Balcom, Isaac Larnard, Robert Lovewell, Adam Dickey and Zebulum Gitchell. Not all were recorded as property owners until some years later, and some may have been here on a come-and-go basis at first. Actually there was a greater number of settlers eligible to register who did not take time from their labors to walk to the center of town for that purpose. It would be several years before the first official town meeting was warned and inscribing their names as freemen could be put off for a while.

A man's arrival in town cannot always be figured from the date given on his deed as some were here years earlier and others never came at all. There are a number of instances where fathers, sons or other blood connections came to clear land, bought sight unseen, months before their families arrived. A few transients could not definitely be dated but references were found placing them here as squatters along the Bradford border several years before the first legitimate settlers arrived. Still others came to look around, working to clear land for proprietors or property owners before deciding on a particular site for themselves. They might be here a year or five years before making a choice, returning to larger settlements for brief intervals. Some were "lone wolves" who enjoyed the solitude and freedom of the wilderness, others were hunters and guides who pitched a crude shelter to resort to at the end of a day in the open. Their names are found in deeds referring to pitches made by Hill, Winch, Farnum, Goodhue, Brown, Martin, Davis, Whicher, Fowler, Richardson, Sanborn and others. Landowners or not, they would be eligible to vote as freemen if living here when the town was organized.

The list of freemen grew, dateless and seemingly at random as if the clerk jotted them down whenever he had reason to refer to the records during moments spared from working his land. Fresh sheets were never used and names are found scattered over several pages containing other information, perhaps to conserve paper which was expensive and rare.

Some freemen spent their lifetime here and some left for parts unknown within a few years, selling their property, if any, before or soon after their departure. A few settled in towns nearby. The following names with misspellings are listed, not in order inscribed but alphabetically for easier reference:

The name of Col. John Taplin never appeared but his sons Brigham and Gouldsburn were added in later years.

Men of many trades and talents listed their specialized crafts after their names on land deeds if they did not use the more common one of yeoman or husbandman, meaning farmer. The professional class, which was least in number, used physician, attorney or school master to denote their training while the wealthy man labeled himself gentleman, his military title preceding his name if he possessed one.

The occupations represented on early deeds by permanent settlers included joyner, boat builder, miller, malster, labourer, tanner, carpenter, blacksmith, cordwinder, turner, clerk, shopkeeper, wheelwright, innkeeper, merchant, bricklayer, cooper, shoemaker, cloathier, shipmaster, mason, weaver and tradesman. All these skills were needed, the blacksmith for latches, locks, hinges, the plow point with plates and bolts of iron to be fastened to wooden moldboard plows, square iron nails worth at least ten dollars per thousand and sold for two, four, six, eight and ten for a penny, these terms still in use to denote their size. He also supplied axes, scythes, all tools used by other craftsmen such as hammers, saws, augers, etc., ox and horse shoes, kettles and pans. Amos Heath in the southwestern part of town and Ebenezer Seaver in the northeastern corner were early blacksmiths, the latter being our first gunsmith. Others of their trade were Jonathan Dustin, Daniel Drew, Elijah Allen, Amos Ingals, John French, Samuel Stiles and Dudley Kimball.

The Eaton Brothers and several of the name of Fellows were carpenters at the Corner, and John Mills was one of the first of this trade to locate near the Center. Several years later in 1783 he purchased a corn mill and sawmill on land known as "the mill lot" to become a miller, and supply himself with boards essential to his trade. Sawn boards from the up and down saw relieved him of the time-consuming chore of splitting them from wide straight blocks. He and the joyners (joiners), who were in demand to finish inside woodwork for houses and build sturdy furniture of pine and maple to furnish them, produced sashes and blinds, doors, wagons, sleds and coffins. They mixed paints and stains, brick red or sky blue, using beeswax for polish. The diaries kept by the wife of Nathaniel Andrews a generation later tell of her husband making caskets to order in a few hours if his stock on hand did not contain the proper size, and her responsibility of lining them with an assortment of materials before delivery. Nat added the steeple to the Union Meetinghouse in 1870, the present East Corinth Congregational Church, compounding his graining paint to decorate the interior. Joyners and carpenters were represented by John Haseltine, Benjamin Hadlock, and Samuel Currier in their respective neighborhoods.

The turner had much in common with the carpenter and joyner, as did the cooper and wheelwright, because all worked with wood. Among the articles turned by Mathew Miller were bowls, table legs, posts for bedsteads, and tableware for daily use. The cooper was the busiest man in town to supply the great demand for his pails and tubs to store butter and sugar and a dozen other commodities in the home, the barn and the mill. Stephen Merrill could have used more hours of daylight to ply his trade of cooper and clear his farm. His shingles were sold or exchanged for other goods as fast as he could split and shave them to replace bark roofs of log cabins. His brother Peter, the bricklayer, was equally rushed building chimneys of brick which were safer and superior to the crude ones of clay and stone.

The late Rowland Day never bought a shingle in his life, replacing them as needed by sitting astride a shingle horse and pulling the hand shave with wooden handle at either end across a block of wood to provide roofing and siding that would last for years. The simple contrivance worked as well for him as it did for his great grandfather, Shalor Rowland, who at first rived his cedar shingles with frow and frow club, using the same device to get out clapboards.

The tanner was a most essential man to judge from the number of men in this occupation who bought land along mill streams to set up their vats and drying sheds. There was David McKeen who first located at the Center to start a tannery before moving to southeast Corinth where he purchased land in 1779 with a grist mill on it. He immediately built a sawmill, the first on the gore, to make full use of the water power and to erect a plank house for his residence. He drew the heavy mill irons through the woods from Colchester, Vermont on an Indian travois, a primitive drag with platform supported by two long poles, the forward ends attached to oxen like the shafts of a sleigh, the rear ends trailing along the ground. David McKeen was a warm-hearted man with many talents, devout in his way of life, serving the town as its first constable in 1780 and holding the office of justice of the peace for many years.

The tanner, whose business smelled to high heaven, located on a brook near the bark mill where the tough outer shell of hemlock, oak, chestnut, etc., were ground, staining everyone and everything red with its dust. He needed quantities of water for his outdoor vats where hides were soaked with ground bark for months before transfer to vats containing water and hen manure for further treatment. He might process the hides in a fulling mill before final soaking and rolling. When dried he had hard tough leather for harnesses, soles and boots, or the softer more pliable kind for shoes. Every community had a tanner to supply leather to shoemaker and harness maker, although he often made these finished products himself in spare hours. Other tanners were Ichabod Robie, Ebenezer Porter, Simon Johnson, John Edwards, Nathaniel Ingals and Benjamin Leach.

The cordwainer, whose trade was never correctly spelled in town records as it was listed cordwinder or cordwander, was a shoemaker who either had his own shop where he might employ a few men, or traveled from farm to farm much as the seamstress did "whipping the cat" with his kit of tools and supply of leather to outfit the whole family with boots and sturdy footwear from toddlers to grandsire. He usually took his pay in produce which was exchanged at the store for commodities he could not raise on his land. There was a goodly number of these men in town, Thomas Wason (or Warson,) Benjamin Leach, Caleb Ladd and Webster Bayley. Reuben Page had a shoe shop near his house on Page Hill which his sons helped him to operate as he neared the age of ninety. John Chubb and son employed several men in the Hollow to assist them in their shoe business which supplied a firm in Salem, Massachusetts and Benjamin Scribner operated a one-man shop on his land.

Grist mills were of prime importance to supply families with bolted flour for their bread, and millers were located on every mill stream within a few years, making it unnecessary for the settlers to travel to Bradford to the falls of the Waits River where Col. John Peters erected the first mill of this type in 1772. Those located in the northern areas of town found it more convenient to go to the mill west of Newbury Village for this service. Before grist mills were in operation locally, and the grain crop depleted, Jacob Wells and William Bennet who lived in the southern part of town learned that a man located in Piermont, New Hampshire had winter rye ready to harvest. They left in the night with their sickles and bags hoping to get grain to supply bread for their families. Others like themselves were already there for the same purpose. At sunrise the owner permitted them to cut the rye, each man allotted one bushel which he promised to repay in like amount the following winter. Fortunately it was a lovely day and perfect drying weather for the grain which was spread in the sun before removal to the barn for threshing. At nightfall they started for Bradford where they had it ground into flour, reaching home at three in the morning, just twenty-four hours after they started on their journey. This is but one example of the generosity of early settlers, whether in the same town or a dozen miles away.

The first mill in operation was probably the one at Cookeville, built by John Nutting who arrived in 1777. It is said he brought the first grindstone into town in 1778 from Newburyport, Massachusetts. Then again it might have been the one on the gore purchased by David McKeen in 1779, in contradiction of tradition that John Aiken of Wentworth, New Hampshire was the first to build a grist mill there in 1780. We know the gore was the first area in town to be settled and it is possible Aiken was here several years earlier working for some one else before making a permanent home in that locality. About this time Robert Orr, an experienced miller, started a mill beyond Cookeville toward the Center. John Poor operated a gristmill in West Corinth for years before selling to Jethro Sleeper. John Burgin at the Corner was another miller who also owned half interest in a sawmill which he sold in 1808 to Eliphalet Merrill before moving to East Corinth Village.

Gristmill at East Corinth built by Col. John Taplin - 1783

There were two grist mills in the vicinity of East Corinth, the first built by Col. John Taplin in 1783 in the center of the village. The Colonel's mill was still grinding grist for Wirthmore Feeds when destroyed by fire on January 18, 1936. This mill and other manufactures in East Corinth changed hands so many times over the years it was almost impossible to trace each ownership, especially when a lot of a few acres was subdivided into plots measuring rods in quantity which were crowded with a variety of shops and small houses, the latter being used as sheds and ells when replaced by larger dwellings. Unfortunately, early deeds often failed to list a house as being included when property changed hands although it is known one was in existence at the time. Our forefathers were long in the use of legal phrases but short on essential details which made it much more difficult tracing deeds.

In 1787 a second mill was built on the Waits River by Robert Lovewell who soon sold to Joshua Hale, the latter losing interest shortly thereafter. Amos Ingals tried running it for awhile, as did John Heath and Josiah Farwell. The foundation of a mill can still be seen along the banks of the river on Eugene Eastman's property and it is certain the old grist mill stood on this site long before the last known manufacturer, Ward Carpenter, a turner, got out laths and chairstock for carpenters and cabinet makers. Using all the space available in his mill, he also ran a small shop where tables, highchairs, cradles and other durable household furnishings were made, some still in use locally.

Sawmills also were frequently sold or leased in the early years, the owner becoming interested in other types of manufacture and too busy to run his first venture. A good example of this is the Johnson Family, Isaiah, Simon and William, at the Center who disposed of the grist mill at the foot of the hill leading to Cookeville to spend more time in their tannery, bark mill, blacksmith shop, in which a trip hammer was later installed, and distillery, all on the same stream and some under the same roof. Their interests were soon expanded to a carding and fulling mill where home-woven cloth was processed to a smooth firm surface for dress suits and coats that lasted a lifetime. A ready market awaited any surplus cloth, either locally or in the cities of Massachusetts which were visited several times yearly by shopkeepers who engaged teamsters to haul salts of potash and other country products in exchange for tea, coffee, spices and commodities, foreign or domestic, that were not native-grown or manufactured.

The enduring quality of fulled cloth was its most desirable feature in the eyes of economically-minded townspeople as a man more often than not was buried in the same suit made for his wedding fifty or more years earlier, the fabric showing hardly any signs of wear.

So successful was the Johnson Family that a store was found profitable to take care of other needs of their customers when they came to the mills on business.

There were several brickyards in town, one in South Corinth on Crook property, another at Cookeville started by Col. Ananiah Webb whose potashery did a thriving business before it came into the possession of Daniel Cooke, and a third in East Corinth on the outskirts of the village along the road to Page Hill where George Taplin, great grandson of Col. John, fired 160,000 bricks in September, 1880, in kilns almost a century old at the time.

Elias Stearns, a clothier, arrived in Southwest Corinth in 1796 and may have been employed in later years by John Richardson of Boston, Massachusetts, who built a large cloth dressing mill at West Corinth in 1800. For several generations the business was profitably carried on by his family. The prosperity of this community was known throughout town and may have influenced Charles Burnham, who was born there in 1808, to stay at home and build up a booming mercantile trade in the old Union Store where he was successful in establishing a postoffice in 1860. This was a great convenience and saved trips to the center of town where Jacob Brown became the first Corinth postmaster in 1806. It was not until 1830 that Phineas Stearns was appointed postmaster at East Corinth and with this accommodation contact with people at the Center became less frequent.

One of the first innkeepers was Robert Rowe at the Center who never received a penny for the years he allowed his establishment to be used for town meetings. Profits from the bar in the entrance and the good table set by his wife kept him prosperous. A custom was also established for men to gather there on other occasions to hear all the local gossip. His ale was supplied by malster Daniel Clark who located on the mill lot with Robert Orr, and his whiskey came from Johnson's distillery a short distance westward. The Rowe Tavern still stands across the road from the Center Church. The stables disappeared years ago.

Rowe had little trouble with drunkards although most everyone drank heavily, farmers, ministers and some women. Seldom did they become intoxicated as hard work, exposure to bitter temperatures and storms and sturdy constitutions withstood the effects of apple brandy and potato whiskey. The abstainers were rare as few realized the deteriorating effects of intemperance. Every home served cider which was much more common with meals than tea or coffee, and milk was used for dairy products for the table or exchange at the store. There were so many "cyder" mills in every community that they were rarely listed in early deeds. Every family stocked twenty to fifty barrels of cider yearly for home consumption, some of it bound to become hard, and it is to the credit of the majority that they never drank anything stronger than unfermented apple juice.

Another innkeeper at the Center was John Bickford who opened his doors to a meeting of freemen at one p.m. on December 25, 1813 when they found the Meetinghouse too frigid for comfort. He now owned the Rowe Tavern never changing the name of this popular hostelry. Christmas then and for years to come was not regarded as a holiday or holy day to these Puritan descendants. Their main business was to bid off for ninety-eight cents weekly the care of a town pauper by the name of Colby to Capt. Benjamin Crook who was to feed, clothe and look after the old man until March meeting.

The Stevens tavern on the edge of the parade grounds in East Corinth was a popular stopping place for travelers entering town, as was Cooke's Inn at a later time, Ainsworth's Tavern House near the Center and Reuben Page's brick mansion on the Newbury line.

Benjamin Brown, Andrew Hodges, Stephen Davis and Alexander Smith were listed as merchants or traders. Brown located at the Corner, Hodges in South Corinth and Davis near the Bradford line. Nearby lived weaver Nathan Lamb and his wife, Hannah, whose cloth was eagerly sought by the traders.

Among the professional men the only one describing himself as school master was Benjamin Porter who bought 100 acres of land at the Corner in 1796. In April of 1813 the land of Dr. Benjamin Porter was put up for taxes and redeemed but whether the school master and physician were one and the same man is uncertain as no further records were found of either. A doctor who did practice at the Corner was Joseph Peters who evidently was there for some time when he increased his property through purchase of a three-cornered piece of land bordering along the parting of the Washington and Vershire Roads in 1793. The following year he sold out and left for parts unknown. Before him, and for a short time only, was Dr. Arad Stebins (Stebbins) who sold his land on the gore and moved to Bradford before 1790.

The town was not long without a doctor when Joshua Tenney came with his family from Salem, New Hampshire in 1795 to buy forty acres at Cookeville from Richard Ayer, his land running along the south side of the Grate Road leading through Corinth to Washington, and down the road leading to Vershire. He became recognized as an expert on fevers and for nearly fifty years carried on an extensive practice here and in neighboring towns.

Dr. Samuel White of Newbury owned several lots in town, one along the Waits River near East Corinth Village which he sold to Joseph Knight of Atkinson, New Hampshire, in 1793, ancestor of Eugene Eastman. He never came here to practice but did treat special cases in an emergency.

Dr. Ephaphras Smith (Eppaphras, Eppras, etc.,) whose first name had so many variations in spelling it was finally reduced affectionately to Dr. Epp, arrived in 1807 from Bradford to locate in East Corinth where he bought one-half acre of land seven years later to build a large colonial house for his bride, Susan Taplin, whom he married in 1811. The house stood on the site of the William Baker cottage and was destroyed along with the old Merrill, later Blood, store in 1913. Dr. Epp was born in Hanover, New Hampshire in 1778, his father, Aaron, moving there from Hartford, Connecticut where the progenitor of the family, Joseph Smith, was one of the first citizens of old Hartford in 1656 when he married. Dr. Epp was well-suited for the rigor of a wilderness practice as his grandfather, Samuel, and his father were soldiers of the Revolution, the latter serving with Rogers Rangers in an earlier war. Dr. Epp, undoubtedly, received part of his education at Eleazer Wheelock's institution, Dartmouth College, before he became one of the pioneer medical men of Vermont.

Following his death in 1850 he was succeeded by his son, Erdix Tenney Smith, a homeopathic physician whose training followed the system of curing diseases by administering small quantities of drugs to induce the same symptoms of the complaint itself, nothing more than fighting fire with fire. Dr. Erdix rode the same hills covered by Dr. Epp when roads were mere trails and medicines were carried in saddlebags. At the age of sixty-seven he retired and moved to Bradford where Erdix, Jr., entered the Academy to prepare for Dartmouth College, the alma mater of his father and grandfather. He was the third generation to become a doctor, locating in Springfield, Massachusetts in 1905. Here he established a reputation as surgeon of exceptional skill and by continuous study kept abreast of modern discoveries and changing methods of practice. In 1957 he was honored by the trustees of Wesson Memorial Hospital for fifty-one years of continuous service on the staff which he had served as chief. The name of Smith lives on in the village through the stained glass window in the Congregational Church dedicated in the early 1900's to the memory of Dr. Epp, and the trust fund established by Dr. Erdix, Jr. in January of 1959 for the support of the church.

When Jesse Carpenter moved his family here from Rehoboth, Massachusetts in 1805 to a farm on Pike Hill he had no idea that his son, Alvah, would be the first doctor in town to attend a medical school. Alvah graduated from Castleton Medical College, Castleton, Vermont in 1828, returned to his native town and set up practice in Cookeville. He followed the allopath school of medicine, just the opposite of Dr. Epp, which treated disease with drugs and herbs that induced symptoms different from those produced by the ailment itself. He married Ann Julia Cooke, daughter of Daniel and Dorothy Nutting Cooke, and for fifty years administered to the ills of the townspeople.

Other doctors who practiced in town during the 1800's were Joseph Ormsby, Cyrus Carpenter, John Robie, Hiram Morgan, Baldwin, Morrison, Daniel Dustin, Adoniram Smalley, Israel Hinkley, H. H. Gillett, George W. Scott, George W. Downs, Foster, John Ormsby, C. B. Flanders, H. M. Corwin, Charles N. Fox and William E. Locke. There were others who stayed a very brief time before moving on to greener pastures.

At several periods in its earlier history Corinth supported two and three lawyers at a time, all successful and busy handling the many lawsuits over land boundaries, bad debts, family quarrels and school squabbles. Several served as school masters for a few terms and were a big improvement over some of the teachers who were not much better educated than their oldest pupils.

A list of justices of the peace was always included in E. P. Walton's Vermont Register and Almanac containing statistics and officials from the national level down to the smallest township. Although not lawyers, nor did they call themselves such, they were chosen for their sagacious ability to handle multiple problems that beset every town emerging from primitive conditions. Today their duties are much more limited but this was not the case when a man could gain a good livelihood and reputation on his justice work alone. Usually they were well-educated through books if not advanced schooling and capable of settling legal matters on the local level. Among those who served in this capacity before the first full-fledged lawyer arrived were John Nutting, Samuel Haseltine, Moses Muzzey, Joshua Tenney, David McKeen, Goulds-burn Taplin, Richard Smith, Winthrop Green, Stephen Eaton and Joshua Merrill.

One who was never elected a justice because his services were demanded as selectman was Nicholas Hale who came here with his brother, Joshua, from Plaistow, New Hampshire via Newbury in 1795 to locate north of the Center. He was not trained as a lawyer having but a common school education but was noted as a scholar with a retentive memory. He was well informed on many subjects and the townspeople eagerly sought his advice when legal questions arose. They knew his decisions would always be on the side of justice.

In 1806 the Hon. William Spencer opened an office in Cookeville to become the first trained lawyer in town. He was born at Hartford, Connecticut, on August 6, 1781 and studied law under Samuel Miller of Middlebury, completing his apprenticeship with Judge Mattocks of Peacham. In 1804 he was admitted to the county bar and to the Supreme Court in 1807. He immediatly became successful both in the town and the county, serving as justice of the peace for many years. He was the eleventh and last judge of Orange County Court, Col. John Taplin being the first when the territory was known as Gloucester County. For five years Mr. Spencer served as assistant judge under the new system, and was justice of probate for sixteen consecutive years. He represented Corinth more times in the legislature than anyone since, and died January 18, 1871 in his ninetieth year.

Dr. Joseph Ormsby had six sons, the most brilliant and eccentric being Robert McKinley who was born at Cookeville on June 29, 1814. He studied at Bradford Academy, showing a remarkable aptitude for writing. In his wanderings to Ohio and Louisville, Kentucky he was both a teacher and reporter for daily papers. A series of articles written by him attracted the attention of Judge Marshall who invited him to become a law student in his office. He practiced law in Louisville until 1842 when he returned to Vermont and opened an office in Bradford, acquiring an extensive library of legal and literary works. He was too generous a man to both clients and friends to ever accumulate wealth in spite of the largest practice in the county. Writing remained his first love and his articles continued to be published in the newspapers. He prepared a spelling book which was adopted as a standard text book throughout Vermont when the State Board of Education was first established in 1857.

He remained a strong Whig as long as that party was in existence and whole-heartedly supported the campaign of Daniel Webster when he became interested in the presidency of the United States. He even published and edited for a time the Northern Enquirer, a weekly newspaper at Bradford, to stimulate interest in Webster's nomination. In 1859 he published, "A History of the Whig Party" which brought him little profit as there were few sales or demands for a book describing the policies of a practically dead organization. He then aligned himself with the Democratic Party and was defeated in 1864 when he made a bid for Congress from the Second Congressional District. Nothing ever upset his calm disposition, lack of money or political defeat. He moved to New York City in 1866 and became associated with Charles O'Connor in the defense of Jefferson Davis following the Civil War. Following his death on February 20, 1881, the New York Times praised him as a man of decided mental powers and an active philosophical student of politics.

Elliot Taplin Farr, born in Corinth in 1815, studied law in Bradford before teaching several terms at Corinth Academy, occasionally engaging in the practice of his profession. He served as justice of the peace and superintendent of schools while here. He then moved to New York City to enter the law firm of Col. W. D. Crafts, former partner of Aaron Burr. Mr. Farr became publisher and editor of the Mother's Magazine in 1868, an old and staid publication, which cost Harriet Eastman six cents postage when delivered to the East Corinth postoffice.

Rodney Lund, youngest of three children of Thomas and Anna Lund, was born in Corinth on April 28, 1830. He first studied law under the Hon. William Spencer and was admitted to the Orange County Bar in 1852. Competition drove him out of town within a year and in 1867 he ended up in Boston where he became very successful and renowned for his ability.

In the fall of 1867 Riley H. Mardin opened on office in East Corinth, staying a year before moving to Bradford and from there eventually to Minnesota where he spent the remainder of his life. Mardin deserves mention for the tenacity he showed while attending school and studying law as he often had to stop one or the other to support himself. He would undertake any type of work that paid the most whether it was farming, working in saw mills, rafting on the Connecticut River or teaching school. He was noted for his great pluck and energy and was bound to succeed in whatever he undertook.

Another native son, Alden Sprague Sanborn, son of Amos, practiced law here in 1845 and then moved west a year later to become well known as a lawyer until a mental breakdown drove him to suicide. The year he went west Daniel James located in East Corinth and was appointed registrar of probate court for the Bradford District. In 1850 he left for Illinois and no doubt was friendly with Abraham Lincoln when he traveled to Sycamore where attorney James settled.

Perhaps the most outstanding character among Corinth lawyers was Amos Stearns Little, a self-made man, eccentric but with many excellent qualities. He was born in Corinth in 1800 and admitted to the bar in 1857, eight years before his death. He served his town as justice of the peace for many years, also as constable and town representative. For several years he was secretary of the Corinth Copper Company. He actually had very few cases either in the county or supreme courts because of his peculiarities. An account of his life states, "in these days and for many preceding years there was a good deal of justice business and the contests did not always turn upon the accurate determination of legal principles involved in the cases on trial."

Lorenzo Dow Carpenter attended Corinth Academy before being admitted to the bar in 1857. He practiced in town until 1865 when he moved to California where he combined teaching and farming until fatally injured by a falling tree three years later.

Charles Brigham Leslie of Wells River arrived in East Corinth in April of 1844 carrying a few law books in his satchel. When the June Term of Court rolled around he had six cases lined up, successfully defending all of them. In November he entered the office of Elijah Farr of Wells River and became one of the noted lawyers in Orange County before accepting a judgeship.

Charles Collins was born in West Corinth in 1832, third in a family of five children born to Amos and Ruth Collins. At the age of seven he was left fatherless when Amos was killed while assisting in raising the frame of a grist mill, falling from high timbers to the rocks below. Charles then lived with his namesake and uncle, Charles Collins, Esq., of Corinth who apprenticed him at the age of fourteen to a furniture manufacturer in Chelsea named Tinker. He studied law under another native son, Robert McK. Ormsby, in Bradford and was admitted to the bar in 1857. For a short time he practiced law in Corinth before locating in West Fairlee where he died suddenly at the age of twenty-nine, suffering from what was termed an attack of bilious colic. The young physician in attendance bathed his abdomen with chloroform which an autopsy revealed to be the cause of death, not the disease. No blame was ever attached to the grief-stricken doctor.

For a short time Edward Evans opened an office in East Corinth before moving to West Fairlee, then Boston where he entered the wholesale grocery business to reap a fortune. Little is known about a Mr. Patterson, born in Corinth, who became the third member of a law firm in Troy, New York that did an extensive business.

The last known lawyer to live in East Corinth was Joseph Kimball Darling who was born in Corinth March 8, 1833, the son of Jesse and Rebecca Whitaker Darling. He prepared for college at Corinth Academy and under a private tutor, teaching several terms of school before going to California via the Isthmus of Panama. He was employed by Col. John C. Fremont as surveyor in Mariposa County for eight years, returning in 1859 to marry Mary Alice Knight of Corinth. Within two weeks he was on his way to California again for another two-year stint, arriving back in New York City the day following the fall of Fort Sumter. He joined the Bradford Guards in 1862 and a year later was mustered out. Near Cookeville he discovered a continuation of the Pike Hill copper vein in the valley on the east side of Hurricane Ridge which he sold profitably. In 1864 he became a partner with Loami Hale in the old Blake Store at East Corinth. Hale soon left to go into the carriage business and in 1871 Darling also sold out to study law in the office of future governor Roswell Farnham of Bradford, being admitted to the bar in 1874. He opened an office in his home at East Corinth where he did a large business until he moved to Chelsea with his family in 1884. While a resident of Corinth he served as postmaster from 1864-1871, and was twice defeated as Republican candidate to the legislature, the town being strongly Democratic at the time. He did, however, serve a biennial term as State's Attorney, 1882-1884.

The last lawyer in town was Caleb Cushing Sargent, born December 24, 1835 in Candia, New Hampshire. He studied law and graduated from Dartmouth College in 1860. That same year he was engaged as teacher at Corinth Academy, practicing law in his spare time. On May 28, 1861 he married Cordelia Cooke, daughter of Theodore and Ruth Tenney Cooke. For years he operated a store at Cookeville on the road leading to the Center, maintaining his law office on the second floor. He discharged the duties of assignee of the defunct Union Mining Company of Corinth in 1878-1879 and later became paymaster, clerk and treasurer of the Vermont Copper Mining Company, also of the Vermont Copper Company in their several business operations at Pike Hill and Vershire until their suspension in 1883. For nineteen years he served as postmaster in addition to his service to the town as superintendent of schools, justice of the peace, town agent and selectman for several years in succession. He was representative from Corinth in 1878. In 1886 he was elected assistant judge of county court. He died July 26, 1913, the last of a long line of lawyers to locate in the Town of Corinth.

A Patchwork of Chronicles

THE EARLY land records of Corinth provide interesting reading once the handwriting with its obsolete formation of a certain few letters becomes familiar. Oftentimes words were quite sensibly spelled as they sounded while others were real puzzlers, giving the impression that pronunciation or meaning either varied from that of today or the town clerk was absent-minded when he copied from his memo slips. Some were impossible to decipher, blotted, or the ink faded to blend with the color of brittle pages. Misspelling of proper names was the most common error, the simple name of Sanborn having four or five variations. Several of the same name were listed, unrelated, or covering three generations without any explanation immediately following to denote father, son or grandfather.

So concerned was the town with the fragility of Volumes I and II that Joseph M. Knight was hired in 1905 to work with Benjamin B. Scribner, town clerk, to copy them into a strongly-bound book for the use of researchers. Even they had trouble transcribing the material as errors of a minor nature were occasionally found.

Records in the first half-dozen volumes cover a span of seventy years, 1764-1834, the biblical lifetime of man, and leap from property deeds to unrelated subjects concerning wandering mules and inter-town feuds. The recordings of the 18th century are in chronological disorder, a deed of 1764 following one of 1790, or a notation of 1811 crowding a transaction of 1780. Settlers who cleared their acres on land "which did not intrude on any pitch already made" were dismayed years later to find their choice of location superseded by earlier deeds which belatedly appeared in the town clerk's office. It is surprising so few deeds were lost between the dates of issue and the lapse of two or three decades before they were recorded. Justices of the peace and lawyers were kept busy for years straightening out the confusion caused by over-lapping claims.

So interesting were these varied documents, explanatory of conditions prevailing at the time, a few are listed here, unusual spelling and all, in the order they were written down.

Libra I, Folio I, contains the deed of 133⅓ acres of land more or less sold by Col. John Taplin on January 13, 1781 to George Banfill, town clerk, both of Corinth, County of Gloucester, State of New York, for the sum of 230 Spanish milled dollars, 100 acres beginning at a beech tree at the corner of lot formerly owned by Eben Sanborn. Also 133⅓ acres more of land beginning at a beach "markt G. B.," and here a few key words are missing. References are made to land Banfill bought of John ——, 100 acres of the second lot pitched by John Brown where Caleb Richardson "workt." The other 33⅓ acres were included as payment for Banfill's past labour on said pitch. Nowhere does the total acreage appear. The deed was recorded quite promptly, just one year after date of issue.

The missing last name of John in the first deed shows up in deed No. 3 when Banfill recorded 100 acres of improved land he bought on August 31, 1780 from John Mills for 600 bushels of wheat. This middle lot joyned westerly on land that Samuel Webster bot of Henry Lovewell, and easterly on 200 acres with improvements and crops Banfill purchased from Ebenezer Sanborn in deed No. 2, dated August 25, 1780 for another 600 bushels of wheat. Further along in books II and III Banfill recorded deeds of land purchased or sold by him several years earlier than deed No. 2.

Deed No. 4 covered 155 acres Col. John Taplin sold his son, Major

Early Street Scene of Cookeville

John, jr., on February 28, 1780 for the sum of 30 pounds and began at the norwest corner of Lot No. 16 on the hill bearing their name. By now the family of the Major had outgrown their log cabin and was ready to build a frame house to accommodate the increasing brood of children. Three months later the Colonel deeded son Mansefield 100 acres for the same price John, jr., paid for half again as much land. Their brother, William, had to wait until 1786 to buy his cleared acres. Brothers Johnson, Elisha and Brigham were even less fortunate as it was not until 1791 that their father sold them the farms on which their comfortable homes were situated, although for years all the sons paid taxes on land occupied by them.

Deed No. 12 refers to John's Brook which bordered 10 or 11 acres near the Center sold by illiterate John Armon who signed his name with an X, as did Jeremiah and Peter Bowen in other deeds. Out of the hundreds of deeds recorded these men were the only ones to use an X, along with a few women, which speaks well for the public school education provided under English rule.

Logging Scene in Robie Neighborhood

The first deed of its kind, dated June 9, 1789 was from Walter Robie of Candia, New Hampshire, to his well-beloved son, Edward Williams Robie of Corinth, for 180 acres of land, given freely and absolutely in consideration of the paternal love and natural affection which he bore him. Edward had been working the land ever since his father purchased it on January 13, 1785. The following day Moses Dustin, also of Candia, used the same wording when he deeded 100 acres to son Jonathan whose blacksmith shop near the Center was one of the first in that area. On May 11, 1794 Samuel Stiles, now back in his native town of Barrington, New Hampshire, gave his 100 acres on the Barre Road to son Moses who farmed the land and leased the blacksmith shop operated by his father years earlier. James Merrill purchased 150 acres in 1783 near the Center. He was again living in Atkinson, New Hampshire, when he deeded this land on January 15, 1798 to son Jeremiah in consideration of esteem and parental regard. Jeremiah had occupied the land for years and was prospering as a farmer.

The last deed of land given as a gift outright, until years later, was from James Lucas on March 12, 1805, who turned over to his loving son, Benjamin, 50 acres on the corner of Charles Crook's land in South Corinth. The large landowners apparently did not believe in this type of deed although they doubtless were generous enough not to collect the sums stated when property was transferred to family members.

The tax granted by the General Assembly at Windsor in April, 1781 levied an assessment of ten shillings on each 100 acres in town, excepting public rights and church lands. Presumably the money was to be used for support of the independent Republic of Vermont although its purpose was not officially stated in the warrant sent out by Treasurer Ira Allen of Sunderland on November 2 of that year. In due time David McKeen, constable of Corinth, warned the townspeople that this tax must be paid by the 15th of August, 1783 or the following day he would sell at vendue at the home of Col. Nehemiah Lovewell such part of each delinquent's land sufficient to pay the tax and all individual costs. He posted the list of delinquent taxpayers, although no collection charges were to be made against them because money was scarce and the town was experiencing a severe financial recession. Some of those named as delinquents had paid the tax on their cultivated acres, letting the uncleared land go into vendue.

The 1783 list of delinquent taxpayers shown below included absentee landlords whose names are starred. So far as known the others were all living here at the time.

On March 14, 1785 constable McKeen filed his report with the town clerk, stating he had collected all taxes due although he had to sell 1100 acres which were later redeemed. The highest taxpayer was Col. John Taplin who paid taxes on 10,500 acres, some owned jointly by himself and Henry Moore. At the vendue a total of 10,050 acres were redeemed by their owners for payment of taxes due. As the town supposedly contained 24,000 acres the tax on the balance must have been paid by proprietor Henry Moore. This was the first of many taxes levied on property owners, either by the state or town, that we have any record of, and the custom was established by practically every taxpayer in town to wait until the vendue before payment of taxes. The additional cost for bidding land back in at tax sales that followed was less than twenty cents which was not too burdensome on the poorest of landowners who gained more time to raise the money.

In 1789 Joseph Sanborn disposed of his claim to the southeasterly lot in the 46th Right when he was paid six pounds by Elijah Ring for all his labour and pitch. Two years later Col. John Taplin deeded East Corinth Village with his saw and grist mills therein to Daniel Farrand of Newbury for 400 pounds on a note and took it back again for five shillings in May of 1795 when son Gouldsburn assumed the taxes and promoted its growth.

On October 10, 1780 John Haseltine, who gave his address as Bradford, State of Massachusetts Bay, paid 30 pounds for 100 acres lying in a place called Corinth in the New Hampshire grants, alias Vermont, said Haseltine to pitch his land anywhere in town not already occupied. He chose the Center area where he had been living for several years with relatives, the Samuel Haseltines.

Tucked in at the end of Volume II is a notice posted by Robert McCrillis that "a sorrill horse with star on forehead, white stripe on nose, with a square dock, trots and appears to be about five years old, came into his inclosure; also two mules, one a dark sorrell colour, the other a dark brown, apparently two years old. The owner can take them away after proof of property and payment of charges." The date was August 16, 1811. Fence viewers Peter Sleeman and John Smith were called to make a division of fence two years later between Seth Wood and Benjamin Norris. They decided it should be kept in good lawful repair on the south part by Wood, and Norris to do likewise on the other end until they met at the center.

Sarah Colby, widow of Capt. Ezekiel, started selling her land in January of 1793 when 40 acres were deeded to Joshua Davis for 21 pounds, 2 shillings. Her sons Nathan, Hezekiah, Moses, Ezekiel, John, Abner and Henry were each willed six acres by their father while daughters Sarah Silloway, Hannah Norris and Mary Noyes inherited three acres each. She was proud of her grandson a few years later when he bought twelve acres of crops which included wheat, rye, flax, corn and beans for $55.00. The widow received considerably more cash from her sale than Moses Norris of Billy Mead in Caledonia County did when he sold 100 acres, formerly known by the name and called Hill's Pitch, to John Connor for one dollar on January 1, 1800.

42	bushels corn by estimation, on the ears	$21.00
2	bushels wheat	2.00

		$127.15

If Elikam Howe accepted $127.15, which he states was the total paid him, he was either a poor mathematician or generously deducted $43.96 from the bill. It was more likely an omission when recorded. He fared a little better when Pelitiah Corliss paid him $1200 for his stand of 150 acres on the north side of road that leads from Capt. Collyer's to Daniel Cooke's.

In February of that year Simon Johnson agreed to let Gookins and Standring, formerly of Haverhill, New Hampshire take water out of the mill pond at the Center when they needed it for their charding (wool carding) business, each party to keep in repair one-half of the mill pond. Johnson was allowed the privilege of taking all the running gears out of his old grist mill and to draw off water to saw with when it was not wanted by G. and S.

The General Assembly at Middlebury passed a land tax of two cents on the acre in 1800 for building roads and bridges, advertising in the Rutland Herald and the Weekly Wanderer in advance of the tax sale held at Daniel Cooke's inn on November 10, 1803. Taxpayers rallied around to buy back their own property, many of them for the first time increasing their holdings by 50 acres or more of unimproved lands at the cost of tax and charge. This tax was for the benefit of the town and could be worked out on the highways in the months of June and July but this was the time of year that farmers were too busy to save a penny by wasting a dollar.

Michael Corliss sold his Potash (mill) with "kitls and utenshals" belonging to same for $10.00 to Alba Royce who felt it was a fair price for the crude shack with its battered equipment. September 22, 1804 was a busy day for Corliss when he sold the store on the Waits River, lately occupied and improved by him, for one dollar, buying everything back again after he signed a note with Royce whose finger was in every financial pie in the East Corinth area.

By purchasing the six part of a sawmill near Poor's mill, Hezekiah Beede had the privilege of running the mill every Wednesday. The other five days Alexander Smith was in control.

An indenture of March 3, 1772 gave proprietor Henry Moore, Chester, New Hampshire, possession of shares in Corinth belonging to a gentleman, an innkeeper, bookbinder, sadler, wheelwright, butcher and printer, all of New York City.

An indenture immediately following, dated September 23, 1805, was between Russel Catlin of St. Johns Church in Hartland, Rector of the Churches of Hartford and Plainfield in New Hampshire, residing in Windsor, and Roger Freeman and John Kimball of Lebanon, New Hampshire, who were the first to lease 360 acres called the Glebe Lot in Corinth. The lease ran for 999 years at a yearly rent of $16.67. If they fell behind in their payments the Church of England had the right to repossess the land which it did a few years later. On October 22 of that year selectmen Nicholas Hale, Moses Rowell and Stephen Eaton leased 273 acres in the Propagation Right to Moses Caldwell, jr., of Thetford, so long as trees grow and water runs, yielding and paying $35.00 annually to the selectmen in office. In case he failed to pay the yearly rent the land reverted to the town.

A joint life-time tenancy, the first recorded, was signed in 1805 by aging Capt. Thomas Collyer and William Banister, the latter agreeing that the Revolutionary War veteran should have the use of one-half the dwelling house, and room in the barn to store 7 tons of hay and stable 1 horse, 1 cow and 5 sheep, with free ingress and egress from both house and barn. He also had the right to free paster (pasture), necessary firewood, 10 bushels of apples annually, and sufficient manure from his horse and cow to spread on one-half acre near the easterly side of the house for his exclusive use as a garden.

Following the death of Caldwell Wason, the Hon. Jedediah Buckingham, Judge of Probate for the District of Bradford, allotted the following division of the estate to Robert Wason, only son of deceased:

16½ acres of land on main road leading from Corinth to Vershire and remainder of barn not set off to the widow

⅓ part of a cow and 4 stears	$26.66	dry casks	.75
1 chain	2.25	stilyard	.66
pieces of chain and yoke irons	1.56	1 crane	4.10
plough irons	3.34	1 chest	1.00
1 bush scythe	.75	1 chest with draw (drawers)	3.00
Harrow teeth	2.33	1 fire shovel	.50
1 yearling colt	15.00

Daughter Resign Wason was given 12 acres, 43 rods, the use of one-half the dwelling house that remains over and above what is set over to the widow, also one-third part of the cellar. From the personal estate she received:

1/6 part of a cow and four stears	13.33	1 table	.66
1 brass kittle	6.00	1 chair	1.00
1 looking glass	2.50	½ of 3 swine	5.81
1 spider	.16	1 tramel	.50
1 tea kittle	.84

Louise Wason received the same acreage and house space as her sister, and her share of the same cow, four "stears and 3 swine, also one-half of the bed and beding and a five-pail kittle."

The share of widow Patty Wason included one-half the livestock and farm, also pewter, "crokery and one foot whele."

In 1807 Christopher Avery, constable, proclaimed that when the legislature met at Woodstock in October a tax of one cent on each acre was assessed for the purpose of erecting a State Prison and same must be paid in hard money or in bills of the Vermont Bank before the first day of June, 1808. The state was cheated as constable Avery and the selectmen allowed there were 23,040 acres in town and the total tax, therefore, amounted to $230.40. More than 4500 acres on the gore were not included in their allowance.

When Samuel Hinkson agreed in 1806 to let his father and mother, John and Anna, have the use of the former Elaphalet Tenny farm so long as it may please the Almighty to continue them, or either of them, in their natural life, they had the right to use as much land as found necessary to raise bread corn for the next three years. Their son for the same period was to divide the hay crop with them. Thereafter, the parents were to have one-half the crops raised on the farm except hay which would be used to keep stock. Annually in the months of October and January they would receive by the half-bushel their portion of wheat, Indian corn, peas, potatoes, turnips, parsnips, "carrits, onions and all other sorts of vigetable production;" also the fleece (wool) to be divided in the bundle. All horses, neat cattle, sheep, swine, etc. that is now or may be on said farm shall be owned equally by each party. Deeds of this type were very common when aging parents turned their property over to a son for their care and support. They were wise enough to spell out just what they were entitled to and thus avoided argument.

David Davis, an early settler on the Corinth-Bradford gore, was living in the latter town in 1792 when he sold his property. The gore is mentioned in many deeds and extended for miles along the southern boundary of town. No acreage is given in the deed but this was a fairly common omission to exasperate researchers tracing deeds, especially when several pieces of land were involved. This man's fame lies in the fact that he was the father of the first child to be born in Corinth.

Robert McCrillis bid in 150 acres in Right No. 20 for seven shillings, six pence, on January 12, 1796 to satisfy the land tax of half-penny on the acre and costs levied by the General Assembly at Windsor in October, 1791 for the purpose of raising $30,000.00 due the State of New York for relinquishment of all claims to lands in Vermont. There was no record of its redemption by the original owner.

Typical Scene of Early Corinth Farmhouse on Road between Taplin Hill and Bradford Line

The proprietors and landowners were warned that unless they paid the tax of one penny on each acre granted by the legislature in October, 1797, before the 21st of May next so much of their land as would pay tax and cost would be sold at public vendue at the dwelling house of Benjamin Norris, first constable. For each sale of land there would be 19¢ additional added to cover costs. True to form the majority did not pay their taxes on time and their names were inscribed in the land records. The list is much longer than the one of 1783 and is printed here for the interest of those seeking family names. There were so many pieces of property for sale that the vendue was extended over several weeks. Many at this time hopefully bid in small plots to increase their holdings, and not all were redeemed.

The Willard Survey of 1790 is referred to as being the dividing line between Corinth and Fairlee. Ousgood Carleton, for the Province of New Hampshire, was the original surveyor of Corinth, James Grant assisting with the York Survey of 1774.

When a group of Corinth Corner farmers almost came to blows with Vershire claimants of land one mile wide along the south border, granted Vershire by an act of the legislature in 1803, several property owners wanted to get rid of their land in controversy between the two towns. Col. Asa Porter, who liked nothing better than a good legal battle which he invariably won, was happy to buy at a low price the rights of Wailes Aldrich, James Daniels and John Mallby (Maltly), formerly of Corinth but now giving their addresses as Vershire. At the next session in January, 1804 the legislature considered the petition of protest from Corinth and hastily rescinded its previous action, naming the Whitelaw Survey of 1790 as the dividing line between the two towns. The Colonel profited handsomely by his accommodation to worried men who fretted needlessly about impending court fights.

Benjamin Brown had great faith in his beloved wife, Mary, when he willed her one-half of his dwelling house, farm, household furniture and personal estate whether in cash or stock, also full charge of minor children until they came of age, without the usual clause that she would forfeit everything in case of remarriage. His confidence in her ability extended to his appointing her sole executor of his last will on February 13, 1809, a few months before his death.

Mansfield Taplin, sr., former constable, lost an argument over a debt to Israel Clifford who recovered judgment against him of $397.57 in Orange County Court. The writ was levied on five acres near the watering trough of Thomas Sawyer in Corinth, running westerly on the main road leading to Corinth Meetinghouse and by the southerdly line of Thomas Sawyer, the land being in the shape of a Heator, and included buildings and well. Samuel Haseltine, Abel Jackman and Reuben Locke apprised the land only at a value of $105.00.

A group of men at the Corner, desirous of remaining good friends and neighbors, entered an agreement whereby they would abide by the survey lines of John McDuffee, hired at their personal expense, to put an end to their difficulties and establish boundary lines that would never be altered between their several properties. The subscribers were Peter Eaton, Abel Jackman, Richard Smith, James Eastman, Stephen Eaton and Moses Sanborn now living in Chester, New Hampshire. Lawyers and justices did not profit from this amicable settlement.

Reference to a second gore pops up in a deed of 1809 when David Barnett of Topsham sold Alexander Hogg of Orange 10 acres with sawmill and gristmill thereon, the same George Banfill bought of Joseph Sanborn years before, running at the upper end on the Goal (Jail) Branch so-called, toward the Orange line.

Mitchell Corliss deeded John Lovewell one acre of land with Manuage, Hummack and Utensils thereon, seven rods north of the Potash and up the Branch River for one dollar. The strange words are baffling and it will never be known if he got rid of a pig in a poke or the property was repossessed. No mortgage was mentioned in the deed which included a store where Corliss once traded.

Samuel Haseltine was a deeply religious man and in his will he stated that he was infirm in body but of perfect mind, thanks be Given Unto God. He realized the Mortality of his body and knew it was appointed for all men once to Die. His first instruction was that his remains be recommended to the Earth in Decent Christian Burial, never Doubting but at the General Resurrection he would receive the same (body) again by the Mighty Power of God. Elizabeth, his wife, was bequeathed half of everything he owned so long as she remained his widow. His daughters were to be provided for at home so long as they remained single, with the privilege of keeping one cow each. In case they never married they must always be supported from his estate. Son Samuel, jr., came into everything when the widow died or remarried, in addition to one-half the land, stock of cattle, swine, horses, sheep, husbandry tools, money, all wearing apparel, and the pew in the Center Meetinghouse, reserving a place therein for the single daughters and wife, also his father's share in the library. The latter item might have referred to a church library which the individual denominations sometimes provided for their members, or a personal one shared with others. There were many educated men in the central part of town who very likely formed a private library for their use and enjoyment. The next reference to a library was in 1859 when the Universalist Society in East Corinth contributed money for religious books.

The estate of Adam Dickey, appraised in 1810 by Reuben Locke, Jonathan Lovewell and Mansfield Taplin, Jr., at the advice of Dickey's guardians, Stephen Eaton, Abel Jackman and Peter Merrill, selectmen, included some interesting values:

6 bushels wheat (about)	$ 8.75	Curtains and bedclothes	9.00

The discrepancy of $21.99 must have gone for fees to appraisers and guardians as no further explanation is given of the column total.

In 1813 Col. Porter leased the Meetinghouse lot on which the meetinghouse stood, except such parts as are included by fences of other persons and the burying ground and the road the meetinghouse stood on, to Levi Norris for one year for the price of one dollar, also one-half the crops of grain of every kind to be delivered in the field at time of harvest. Norris agreed not to commit any waste or take any wood from the premises, except what was laying on the ground for his own fire. These terms must have been too harsh as the Colonel leased the same lot in 1816 for six months to Robert McCrillis, jr. who was to pay the price of one ear of Indian corn if he used his endeavors to prevent waste being committed. A reference was found where the Colonel gave the land for the Meetinghouse at the Center although the only deed recorded is from the town agent to the Congregational Society in 1844.

First House in East Corinth Village Beyond Tree

Gouldsburn Taplin found time in 1816 to deed 92 square rods of land for $100.00 to Samuel Heath where his house already stood. No earlier deed was found mentioning a house on this lot but oftentimes dwellings were not referred to when property changed hands. It is the same buildng, with many alterations and additions over the years, where the Valley Health Center is located today. Samuel also bought another 33 square rods across the river where his mill for grinding bark and fulling leather for his tanyard was located, with the privilege of keeping up one-sixth part of the road and bridge leading over to same. He had to keep in repair one-tenth part of the dam in exchange for use of the flume which gave him the right to pass with team or timber at any time.

When Samuel Currier sold for $1,000.00 his home farm on April 1, 1817 to Sceva Spear of Vershire the deed referred to the lines beginning at a stake and stones standing in the brook on the south side of the road near the old tan works, then along to the norwest corner of the nursery. Certainly with so much of the town still uncleared from the wilderness, it was not a tree nursery! What he meant was an apple orchard which was the one improvement that added greatly to land values.

The inhabitants of School District No. 3 at Cookeville had the new schoolhouse built before Daniel Cooke sold them 17½ square rods of land where it stood and a passage around the same. It was situated west of Cooke's cooper shop nearby, on the south side of the road.

Samuel Corliss bought for $16.00 at a tax sale conducted by H. E. G. McLaughlin of Chelsea, Deputy Collector of the Direct tax for the United States, Third Collection District of Vermont, at the dwelling house of Phineas Dodge, also of Chelsea, 380 acres of land bordering the old Collyer line and lands of Thomas Sawyer, Gouldsburn Taplin, Daniel Corliss and Benjamin Muzzey in the northeast part of town. On the land were two dwelling houses, two barns and shed. The property could be redeemed within two years by payment of tax, interest and amount of improvements made by Samuel in that time. It was land belonging to Samuel and Daniel in the first place so no redemption was necessary.

Hannah Lamb, prosperous weaver on the gore, showed her femininity and love of pretty things in her will of 1818. Son Alpha received one-half the real estate and her side saddle. Daughter Esther Burbank was willed her gold beads, silk cloak, Russell skirt and cambrick gown. Her executor was ordered to purchase and deliver to her daughter, Gene Orr, a string of gold beads which must be worth $8.00 and the same for her daughter, Elizabeth Glidden; also a string of gold beads for her grandchild, Elizabeth R. Metcalf, daughter of her son-in-law, Joseph. To son Samuel she left one feather bed, and to daughter Abigal the $12.00 she owed her mother, plus one full share in the estate for her comfort, convenience and happiness. It was a cheerful will compared to harsh restrictions found in similar documents not quoted here.

Daniel Woods, Jr. and John Currier by mutual consent dissolved their co-partnership in the tanning, currying and shoemaking business. Woods sold his half of the tanyard to Currier, reserving to himself the use and sole improvement of four bark vats and one water vat when Currier was not using it. He also had the privilege of the grinding, pulling or breaking machine, and the liberty to beam hides at the shop until June, 1820. Currier was allowed to take stones out of the mill brook to build a stone wall on the north side of the brook at his own risk in case Woods should later erect a dam below the mill.

When Richard Sawyer died his land was divided between his sons, Plant and Richard, Jr., the latter getting the buildings thereon, also all the husbandry tools, stock of cattle, sheep, swine, horses, his father's clock standing in the house, the pew in the meetinghouse, wearing apparel, silver tablespoon, his loom with all the utensils thereto, and all the household furniture made or brought into the house after the death of his mother. Richard, Jr. was instructed to fit out his sister, Nabby, in a proper manner for housekeeping so far as to make her equal to her sisters, Betsey Poor and Sally Clifford. Each daughter was to receive $100.00 in cash. Until Nabby married she was to have free use of the east fore room in her father's house together with closet, and the west fore chamber, also privilege in the cellar, back room and buttery as shall be necessary for her use, with the liberty of passing from one to the other freely.

She was allowed to take apples from the orchard throughout the season for her own use and to have two bushels of apples each year for winter use. As long as she lived at home she had the free use of her father's loom and the utensils thereto. Son Richard was to find her six cords of hard wood annually, cut and "hawled" at her door, the privilege of more if she needed it for her use, and the right to keep her own cow, free from expense to her. In addition, she was willed 1 silver tablespoon, looking glass in east fore room and hand bellows, also the spot of ground now improved for a garden to be suitably manured each year fit to raise garden sauce on, and the chinth (chintz) bed quilt that she quilted in November, 1809. All privileges were forfeited when she married. His three daughters, and Hannah, granddaughter born to his daughter and Ezekiel Currier, were to have the whole of his household furniture which was in the house at the time of his wife's decease, to be equally divided among them for their use. To his grandson, Peter Clifford, he bequeathed his silver shoe buckles.

The will of Benjamin Muzzey was unique in that it was the first that mentioned a large Bible which was bequeathed to his wife, Judith, during her lifetime and at her decease to their daughter, Hannah Farr. His wife was to have his large bay horse, saddle and bridle, half of the horse wagon and all the household furniture. His daughter, Betsey Blaisdell, was willed one yeak (yoke) of oxen now in possession of her husband, and $40.00 in neat stock.

One of the first sales of church pews was by Nathan Titus who received $26.00 from Daniel Darby of Vershire for two certain pews in the Baptist Meetinghouse in (West) Corinth, No. 38, also the second pew west of the pulpit on the north side of the holuse, being a wall pew formerly belonging to John Smith. The deed was dated February 1, 1821.

Immediately following was a deed from Jonathan and Hannah Rawlins for the sale of a pew in the Congregational Meetinghouse at the Center to Joseph Ormsby, dated September, 1820. This was a wall pew lying east of the pew owned and occupied by William Spencer and south of the narrow aisle and west of Joseph Miles and Joseph Knight pew, adjoining the south front wall, being known and commonly called in the plan of the Meetinghouse the Benjamin Norris pew.

Later that year Moses, Amos and Robert Sanborn sold the heirs of the late Col. Asa Porter 25 acres of land on Pike Hill for ten cents. Perhaps they had no legitimate claim to the land in the first place.

A third gore appears in 1823 when Joseph Miles sold Daniel Rowland 100 acres on what is called the gore in the north part of Corinth on the Topsham south line.

The remainder of the Meetinghouse lot at the Center was sold by the administrator of the estate of Asa Porter, late of Haverhill, New Hampshire, on March 1, 1824. It contained 14½ acres and was sold for $210.00 to John Wheeler of Orford, New Hampshire, on the east side of road leading from the meetinghouse to Newbury and west of John Bickford's dwelling. Previous to this sale on August 18, 1823, John Bickford sold one acre for $200.00 to Shubaul Willis on the north line of the meetinghouse lot and on the north line of the burying ground, with buildings thereon, Bickford agreeing not to build any fence between the north line of the meetinghouse lot and his store where it now stands, nor between the road and the buildings now on the premises in a line in front of the store. It was to be kept common for use of said Willis and the public benefit.

Nicholas Hale, Joshua Merrill and William Spencer, committee of the Center Congregational Church, received $60.00 from Nathan Blake and the widow Betsey Muzzey, both of East Corinth, for a certain side pew in the Center meetinghouse, it being No. 29 on the north side of the broad aisle, bounded on the west by Joshua and Amos C. Tenny slide, and on the east by Andrew McFarland's slide. A pew has been referred to as a slip but this is the first time it was ever called a slide.

The Robert Rowe Tavern was still flourishing when John Bickford, proprietor, sold a few acres of Rowe's old farm in 1828 to Joel Barnes on the west side of the road leading from Corinth Meetinghouse to Newbury.

The first deed ever recorded in which a dwelling house only was sold is dated August 23, 1827 when Benjamin Thurber sold Nathan Sanborn the house he was then living in for $20.00, Thurber reserving the stove with all the apparatus and all the hard wood boards that are in the chamber floor in said house.

On August 12, 1830 Edmund Weston of Randolph, attorney and agent for the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign parts, in that part of the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland called England, leased Edward Robie of Corinth the whole of the west hundred acre lot for the annual rent of $12.67, Robie to pay annual taxes. The lease would be in effect so long as woods grow and water runs if Edward paid the rent on February first each year.

Mansfield Taplin, Jr. bought his house and land on March 21, 1832. It stood on the north side of the road west of Mary Johnson's corner and in front of the dwelling house that John Currier formerly owned and lived in. The house overlooked the main road leading from the Center Meetinghouse to Johnson's mills at the foot of the hill toward Cookeville.

Gouldsburn Taplin was weary of running the various enterprises that took up so much of his time in 1824 and sold his fulling mill in East Corinth to Daniel Rowe, the grist, clover and sawmills to Elijah Blake of Topsham, and the land on which the blacksmith shop stood to Ebenezer Seaver.

Willoughby Corliss, II, spent $460.00 for all the household stuff, implements, goods and chattels of Daniel Corliss "as mentioned herein after, that is to say:" two 3-year old cattle, six cows, two 2-year old steers, one 2-year old heifer, six heifers 1-year old, three last spring calves, one old mare, twenty-five sheep, two old plows, two draft chains, two whiffletree chains, one old cart, three old axes, four old hoes, two old shovels, one cross bar, one wood sled, two yokes and irons, one old double slay (sleigh), one old cutter, two sets of old harness, one iron bail, three feather beds, bedding and bedsteads, two 5-pail kittles, one 3-pail kittle, one brass kittle, ten "tuns" of hay, twenty bushels corn, fifteen bushels wheat, fifteen bushels rye, thirty bushels oats, two hundred bushels potatoes. Willoughby became a wealthy farmer and it would seem he got an excellent start with his small investment in 1825.

The Hon. Supreme Court granted a divorce to a certain Betsey, her last name unimportant, whose husband threatened her life, beat her and refused to provide the necessities of life, abusing her in the most inhuman and barbarous manner, constantly treating her with intolerable severity. He did not appear before the Court when summoned and they threw the book at him, granting Betsey her paraphernalia, all the household furniture, and 3/4 acre of land with house thereon in Taplin Village, 2 gray horses, 1 cow, all the wheat, rye, cornmeal and flour, meat and provisions now upon the premises. Also one note for $75.00 payable in neat stock, balance due on two other notes, and all sums due on any notes executed by an unnamed gentleman in favor of her ex-spouse. Further, he was ordered to pay to the clerk of Orange County Court $200 within 60 days for Betsey's pleasure. The husband was quite a wealthy man and all the gay young blades rallied round to give him sympathy and encouragement until the town grand juror complained of him on suspicion of adultery, whereby he was bound over to the County Court at the next session. The wages of sin were not death as the scoundrel lived to marry again and became one of the wealthiest men in a neighboring town.

The most startling record found in Volume I was the list of names of children born in Corinth: Daughters and sons of David Davis and Elener, his wife: Mary Davis, born December 1, 1772; Daniel Davis born February 3, 1775; Elizabeth Davis born August 29, 1776; William Davis born December 8, 1778. Sons and daughters of George Banfill and Anna his wife: Anna Banfill born April 20, 1777; Reuben Banfill born November 29, 1780. Daughters of John Mills and Elizabeth his wife: Daniel Mills, May 30, 1779; Ruth Mills, August 12, 1780. Daughters of Braket Towle and Nelly his wife: Mary Towle, May 4, 1777; Nelly Towle October 13, 1779. All vital statistics thereafter were recorded in the proper books set aside for that purpose.

We know these people first lived on the gore along the Bradford-Corinth border and in the case of David Davis, it can be presumed that he thought he was in the town of Bradford which already had a few settlers and a grist mill in operation at the time his daughter Mary was born in 1772. Twenty years later David Davis sold the land he purchased some years after the birth of his children and nothing more is known of him. Until proved otherwise little Mary Davis must be given credit for being the first child to be born in Corinth.

Faith of Our Fathers

THE CIRCUIT preachers received an eager welcome from the inhabitants of Corinth who were for the most part religious men, faithful in attendance to the church of their faith before moving to the wilderness. The transient clergy performed a service that was acceptable to many, but particularly for men of the same creed who were comforted by their brief visits as they passed through the scattered settlements. Credit cannot be given to individual circuit riders as there were no organized churches to record their names. The archives of churches that came into existence as the town expanded disappeared years ago when some of them became inactive, and incomplete data only was obtainable of their former glory.

Corinth Center Congregational Church Built in 1800

A greater number of the settlers were Congregationalists who located at or near the Center where population and industrial growth outstripped the border settlements long after organization of local government. Men of this belief predominated at town meeting and were elected to positions of trust for years, serving in a most efficient manner to bring law and order to all.

From the very first they conducted services in private homes or barns, the Robert Rowe tavern, and the district school when it became established. David McKeen and Samuel Haseltine, outstanding men of strong moral character, were among the first to open their homes for the nutriment of Christian principles based on the Articles of Faith and Rules of Congregational Church Government which stressed strict observance of the Sabbath, as did all other denominations. They had a sustaining faith that by working diligently and living according to the Holy Word, hardships would be overcome and rewards, both earthly and eternal, realized only through the mercy of God in the mystery of the Holy Trinity. Adversities or blessings were equally received with Christian resignation.

The first town meeting record in existence, dated March 15, 1786 reads: "4 artcel, it was voated to have Priching this summer and to rase fifty pounds of wheat for same, the silectmen to have power to hire a minster." Their success will never be known as no further information is found in town or church records. It would seem that a preacher on a part-time basis may have been available as the matter was not brought before town meeting for another five years.

The first concern in any new settlement was a burying yard and the only one in town, located at the Center, already had a number of graves before it was brought to the attention of the voters in 1787 when "one peney on the pound was voated for fencing and clearing the buring yeard where it is now began, said tax to be paid in labour at three shillings per day by the midel of September next." A deed confirming this ground for a graveyard was received from Col. Asa Porter who protested the land was part of his proprietary rights. In 1789 a committee was chosen to procure the "minsteral and school rights" included in Publick Lands set aside in the charter for use of the town, but for two years thereafter the freemen refused to contribute funds or labour "for the felling of ten acres of trees on what is called the parsonage lot joining on Mr. Rowe's land, or the lot the buring yard is on."

At town meeting on June 9, 1791 it was voted to raise fifteen pounds in lawful money or salts of lye to be paid to a committee by the first day of January next for preaching the gospel in Corinth. Robert Orr, Richard Ayer, Johnson Taplin, Peter Merrill and Samuel Haseltine evidently hired Mr. Tilay (Tilley) Howe on "provation" (probation) as his name appears in the Warning the following year when a meeting was held on October 23 to vote on his retention, or the hiring of some other person if he was not available. Thirty pounds were raised to hire a minister, with Israel Ingals, Thomas Crook and David McKeen appointed to carry out the mandate of the majority. It is presumed that the money was spent before March, 1800 when the question of preaching appeared again in town meeting. Men of Methodist, Baptist and Christian persuasion had formed their own religious groups in other parts of town and defeated the measure, refusing to support a minister of any denomination whatsoever from town funds. The bitterness engendered by the town tax system of supporting a minister representing a particular religious sect was now ended, and never again would an appropriation for this purpose be included in the Warning.

The Center burying yard was still the concern of the whole town but the voters shrewdly avoided the expense of clearing it by instructing the selectmen in 1797 to let out some part of the "Publick Lot" for so long a time as to pay for clearing up and fencing same. There would be plenty of bidders as salts of ashes or lye were still a valuable commodity. A committee was also appointed to pitch the Society right which would be leased by the town for tillage at a later date. In 1803 they refused to vote funds to purchase tools for digging graves but were in unanimous agreement two years later to have the selectmen purchase "two buring cloaths (burying cloths), one larger and the other smaler, to be kept at Joshua Tinney, Esqr., for use of said town." These were made of heavy black material with gilt fringe and tassels to cover the coffin as it was carried to the grave.

The Congregationalists no doubt were prepared for the action taken at March meeting in 1800 when shortly thereafter their Association of Pewholders received a rent-free lease from the town to start the construction of a Meetinghouse on part of the cleared Publick Lot, directly in front of the burying yard at the Center. Although no records are in existence, it is certain that this Association was the continuation of a religious society formed by the settlers even before organization of town government in 1780, soon after their arrival from Congregational parishes in their native towns.

The original edifice, of the same ground size as the present church which was remodeled in 1845, was sturdily built of axe-hewn timbers, hand-wrought nails and wide-pine boards on an elevation where its belfrey and steeple could be seen looming high above the hills and valleys spread out around it. A large porch or tower on the east end faced the common. A gallery ran around three sides of the interior but it is doubtful if the box pews on the ground floor or the high pulpit were added much before 1820 when the first deeds for the sale of pews, to help pay for the cost of completion, were recorded. The auditorium was two stories high and for many years a single fireplace was the only means of heat.

The Rev. Isaac P. Lowe, a circuit preacher, arrived in 1802 for a short time. He was followed by the Rev. William Pickles in 1805 who remained until his death in 1811, serving as minister and school master who taught bright pupils Latin and Greek. He was a very learned man with a prophetic spirit, foretelling great changes in the federal government in 1860 which led to the Civil War. Though often in feeble health, in the summer seasons he preached in the new, unfinished Meetinghouse, using a carpenter's bench with necessary fixtures attached thereto, for a pulpit. His tombstone in the Center cemetery reads:

"The Rev. William Pickles, a man learned, eloquent and evangelical; born and educated in England; came to Philadelphia 1785, and having preached ably in various places, died here greatly respected, Jan. 1, 1811, aged 56 years, after a minstry in this town of six years."

When the Rev. Clement Parker came in 1813 he was so highly esteemed by the people that the frame of a parsonage was erected a little west of the Meetinghouse on land which was then part of the common. It was never completed in time for his occupancy when he left in 1816 and the skeleton structure was soon removed. Several others came for short periods, the Rev. John Wilcox preaching during the winter of 1819. His meetings were held alternately at the Cooke and Lovewell schoolhouses as there was no way to heat the church at that time. It was this year that the First Congregational Society was formed by faithful members of the church.

In the summer and fall of 1820 the Rev. Charles Chace was a candidate, conducting a religious revival during these months. Through his labor and influence the First Congregational Church was organized on October 10, consisting of David McKeen, Reuben Locke, Alexander Twilight, Anthony Towle, Andrew McFarland, Samuel Haseltine, Eleanor Bowen, Elizabeth Haseltine, Nelly Towle, Phoebe Locke, Sarah Flagg and Anna Philbrick. Of this membership one young man, Alexander Twilight, was to graduate from Middlebury College in 1829 to serve as minister and principal of the Orleans County Grammar School, better known as Brownington Academy. His accomplishments are told elsewhere in this book. A record of 1824 states that the frame of the church was erected and covered in 1801, and remained with little else done to it until 1820 when it was nearly finished by the newly-formed organization which by now had a membership of thirty-three.

Through the years, from September 10, 1804 until September 2, 1845, town meetings were held in the Center Meetinghouse except in the coldest of weather when Robert Rowe's tavern was preferred for comfort. No rent was ever paid for use of the building, and so niggardly was the town that it refused to raise any money to repair the outside of the Meetinghouse in 1831. At the same time compassion was manifested when it was voted to pay the expenses of a town pauper from an illustrious family, to be carried to Hanover for the purpose of having the film removed from her eyes, and again the following year to complete the operation. By 1832 the voters grew so disgusted with the leaky roof of the Meetinghouse that they appropriated $100.00 for its repair. They also ordered the town agent to see that the burying ground yard at the Center be kept clear of all kinds of animals including "cattel, sheep and horses."

The Robert Rowe Tavern As It Looks Today

On September 3, 1844 the town agent was instructed to deed or lease the land on which the Center Meetinghouse and horse sheds stood to the First Congregational Society, with Jacob Stevens, Amos Little and David Dearborn appointed a committee to confer with the pewholders. Two months later $700.00 was voted to build a Town House forty feet square.

At the March meeting in 1845 the location was approved on the south side of the road on land owned by Dr. Adoniram Smalley, if deeded to the town, the lot to be six rods one way and four rods the other. Melitiah Willis, now owner of the Rowe Tavern, was the builder and he allowed the town meeting, then in session at the Meetinghouse, to adjourn to the Town House for inspection on July 12, 1845. So pleased were the townspeople with their new meeting place, they voted use of the Town House to the Congregational Society until repairs were completed on their church. At another town meeting in September the House was accepted as built, the town clerk to have charge of the key. At a fourth meeting in November the selectmen were directed to buy a stove within the next week, Amos Little, J. A. Tenney, R. N. Robie, Hiram Robie and Erdix Tenney to have charge of fires in the building when singing school was held there during the ensuing winter.

Meanwhile the Congregationalists were remodeling their Meetinghouse, first removing the porch and steeple, and cutting the main building down seven and one-half feet. The side galleries were eliminated and the pulpit and pews rearranged to the present style. The repairs were more extensive than planned and it was not until October 23, 1855 that the dedication was held with appropriate ceremonies. No one knew whether a similar service had taken place when it was built in 1800 so the occasion was a particularly gratifying one for all members of the First Congregational Church.

Congregationalists banded together with Universalists, Christians and Methodists in the towns of Corinth, Topsham, Newbury and vicinity of East Corinth on December 30, 1839 to form an Association to build a Union Meetinghouse, open to all denominations, at a cost of $1940.00 including bell, the pulpit to be located by a majority of shares. From the beginning the church was used primarily by the Congregationalists although the Universalist Society was the strongest group in the valley at this time. The latter sect dwindled steadily until a strong revival in 1894 saw a growth in membership that exceeded the Congregationalists until 1916 when its most ardent worker, Dr. Ruthven Rowland, moved away.

The Union Meeting House was located in the center of East Corinth on land owned by Oliver Fellows and the heirs of Elijah Blake of East Topsham. Forty-six pews were sold and deeded to cover the cost of construction, John Merrill buying seven and Nathan Blake two at prices ranging from $28.00 to $42.00. The contractors, Robert Clough and Aristarchus Taplin, turned the church over to the building committee on November 28, 1840. In addition to the above names, pewholders included James Chamberlain, Moses Sawyer, Benjamin Martin, Dr. Epp Smith, Michael and Reuben Stevens, Hilas Grow, Willoughby Corliss, J. and T. Meserve, M. and E. Flanders, Gouldsburn Taplin, Jr., Pelatiah Corliss, William Page, Isaac Stearns, Bodwell Ladd,

Union Meeting House — East Corinth Present Congregational Church

Nehemiah Lovewell, Isaac Taplin, Winthrop Green, Moses White, J. B. Crown, Oliver Fellows, and several others of the names of Sawyer, Corliss or Stevens. All were Congregationalists. Services were held on the third Sunday of each month for years, the pastor at the Center serving both churches.

In 1869-70 extensive repairs were made to the building which had not seen an improvement since it was built. Repairs were spaced years apart and it was not until 1900 that it was agreed that considerable money must be expended if the church was to remain standing. The committee appointed to supervise the work failed in its mission, as told in verses of doggerel printed in the United Opinion of Bradford in September, 1903.

OUR NEW COMMITTEE

We've got a new committee to repair the Union Church,
Now that the new one has stepped in, to our sorrow we can see
It isn't a quarter part as fast as the old one used to be.

The old one built a chimney, and a very good one too,
They also showed price lists, proofs of what they meant to do.
But as matters now are moving, it isn't hard to see
Our new committee's slower than the old one used to be.

The plastering is crumbling right over the parson's head
While the rear end of the church is being painted red.
We've looked to see the front done, but the most we can see
Is a committee slower than the old one used to be.

They say a furnace's ordered, but we haven't seen it yet,
And how without a furnace can the Meeting House be het,
Cold weather is upon us, or it will be soon you see,
With a committee slower than the old one used to be.

Interior of East Corinth Church

Immediate results were obtained and the church was in first-rate condition for a number of years before installation of memorial windows was completed in 1909.

The Center Church was having its troubles too when a member published a scathing article attacking the conduct of a self-instituted committee composed of an unlamented ex-pastor and an uninformed clerical brother from an adjoining town who came uninvited to tell the congregation how to conduct its affairs. He promised these zealous brethren would soon hear something drop and it wouldn't be the First Congregational Church or its parsonage.

In 1918 the old Union Meeting House was officially chartered as the East Corinth Congregational Church, people of several denominations uniting as one. The last vestige of its original appearance, except for ground size, vanished in 1924 when a dedication service was held following great changes on both the exterior and interior. In more recent years the basement vestry has been greatly improved with kitchen facilities for the use of church and community functions.

In 1880 the incoming pastor, the Rev. Horace P. James, started the custom of making his residence in East Corinth, conducting services in both churches every Sunday. This routine continued until 1948 when each church engaged its own minister and conducted its affairs separately. In 1951 members of the Center Church bought the last of several parsonages owned by their Society down through the years. The village church replaced its former two-tenement parsonage with a single-family house in 1937. The Bell Sargent Fellowship at the Center and the Women's Fellowship of East Corinth were organized years ago to work for the benefit of their local church and the support of missionary projects.

It is impossible to name all the ministers that served these churches, the deacons and deaconesses who gave so much of their time, and the numerous bequests left by individual members for financial support. The present pastor of the mother church, The First Congregational Church of Corinth, is the Rev. Paul Williams who attended Nyack Missionary College, Skelton College of Ringwood, New Jersey and the New England Bible Institute at St. Johnsbury. The Rev. David Pearson, graduate of Castleton Teachers College and Andover-Newton Theological School, is in charge of the East Corinth Congregational Church. Both are young men whose lives of dedication are enriched by family ties.

A few reminiscences are given here from the speech of Almiro Blake Fenno Gendrot at the dedication of the Blake Memeorial Library in 1902. At the age of sixty-eight she recalled the days of her childhood, relating how she accompanied her parents, Nathan and Susan Torrey Blake, to services at the Center Meetinghouse in the late 1830's. Among the first of her memories at the age of four she recalled the hurry and bustle on Sunday morning when they drove, rain or shine, four miles to the Center, sat still through a long sermon, ate lunch prepared and carried from home, sat through another long sermon, prayers and hymns in the afternoon. "If it was Communion Sunday my father came down from the choir gallery to assume his official chair with the other deacons. His love for, and interest in the education of his children was ardent. I well remember at this same age his methodical system of instruction as he seated me in my highchair and taught me the simple rudiments of music or the lessons from the catechism."

"His interest was great in founding the church in the village. His home was called "the Minister's Tavern" and he labored unceasingly to collect the pastor's salary. When the Blake house in East Corinth was sold in 1864 it was with the understanding that the new owner, Joseph K. Darling, should take the same interest in the church that the Blakes did — own a pew, ring the bell, furnish wood, make the fire and take care of the minister."

With the passing of years fewer interments were made in the old burying yard at the Center. Families or small neighborhoods had also started cemeteries, more or less private, convenient to their locale. When other churches were built they too bought land nearby for this purpose. At March meeting in 1827 Joel Barnes, Charles Collins, Samuel Fellows and Michael Stevens were elected sextons for the four cemeteries in town, each to serve in his particular locality.

One of the last accommodations relating to burying yards that was voted in town meeting on October 27, 1849 was purchase of a hearse for summer and winter use in all the cemeteries. A convenient shed for storage was immediately built near the Town House. William Baglay was elected sexton, with the obligation of sending himself or another person to attend every funeral in town if called upon. In addition to keeping the hearse clean and in good condition, he had to supply horse and harness at a salary of $10.75 per year. A second sexton, O. W. B. Eastman, was appointed to take charge of the key to the Center burying yard. A new hearse was bought in 1869, and four years later the storage shed was moved to the east side of the cemetery, following enlargement of the old burying yard. It was at this time the town voted to mark the graves of paupers with suitable stones of modest size.

Eventually commissioners were appointed to supervise the care and upkeep of cemeteries throughout town which are supported by interest from trust funds and supplemented by additional money from the General Fund. Cemeteries under their jurisdiction are two at West Corinth, E. R. Darling and West Corinth West; two at East Corinth, the Old and New, located on opposite hills; Munn and Rowell in the southeast, and Corinth Corner. The Center burying yard and the Meadow cemetery in South Corinth are each run by an Association whose trust funds provide full maintenance. At one time there was a small cemetery in the field opposite the South Corinth school house, the latter converted to a summer home in 1956. The graves and tombstones were moved to the Center Cemetery years ago. Present commissioners are B. T. Holland, Jr., Bernard Moulton and Maurice Page.

David McKeen Property Used for Pest House in 1810

A few graves can still be seen in the pasture on the Alden Slack farm in southeast Corinth where victims of smallpox are buried. So serious was the epidemic that Richard Smith, Joshua Merrill and Moses Rowell were appointed at a special town meeting on November 8, 1810 in William Crook's hall to see what method the town would take to prevent its spread. They decided to impower the selectmen, Stephen Eaton, Col. Abel Jackman and Peter Merrill to license one or more pest houses for innoculating persons who wished to have it done according to the laws of the State. To the town fathers' great relief, saintly David McKeen who owned the Slack property at that time, showed his humanitarian qualities when he immediately offered his home for a pest house. His devotion to the nursing of the afflicted was tragically repaid when his wife, daughter Lydia, and infant grandson were among the first to be stricken with the disease, all dying near the same time, also a Miss Hannah Crook. Another kin of the family, Robert McKeen, a brother of the first president of Bowdoin College, removed himself to a remote hut where he was cared for by an elderly man until his death. He was buried in utter loneliness. Oliver Wood stayed alone in his home and managed to survive. The death toll in Corinth was high from this dreaded "spotted fever" which broke out every few years in mild or virulent form until innoculation became widespread. The previous epidemic in town that took many lives, especially among children, was canker or dysentery in 1804 which was fatal within a few hours.

The Locke cemetery in the north part of town is a private burial ground with a dozen or more graves, now completely surrounded by evergreen trees that filter a soft light over the ancient stones. Its care does not come under town jurisdiction.

The First Free Will Baptist Church at West Corinth was organized in 1798 when Elder Ballard of Unity, New Hampshire came for that purpose in response to a request from twenty people in the neighborhood. Their first pastor was the Rev. Daniel Bachelder, also of Unity, who was ordained October 4, 1799 at the home of Moses Marshall. Meetings were held in dwellings of church members, but mostly with John Norris whose hospitality and goodness of heart made him loved by all. An unverified report claims that a small log church was built here in 1800 in what was later called the Hodgdon field, now the property of the Burroughs estate. It may have belonged to the Christian Church under Elder Zaccheus Wells who was stationed in town at the time. Its members strongly believed in tolerance, recognizing that all who believed in Christ were God's children and welcome to their fellowship. This sect was growing strong throughout the State after breaking away from Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian denomiations.

The Free Will Baptist Church at West Corinth was the first organized church of this denomination in the entire region and became the mother church of Corinth quarterly meetings for years, embracing its two churches in town, also Orange, Washington, Topsham and Williamstown.

February 6, 1808 Josiah Norris was granted a license to preach. In 1814 Elder Nathaniel Bolles (Bowles) arrived to hold meetings in private homes or schoolhouses until a permanent church was built in 1816 across the road from the present residence of Edward Perdue. The Meetinghouse was completed in June of that year, forty by forty-four feet on the ground, one-story high with a hip roof and square pews. In 1852 this building was replaced by a larger church with a seating capacity of 300, at a cost of $1700.00. It was located a short distance from the earlier one, in the northeast part of West Corinth, and referred to in the deed as the Union Meeting House. It contained a sweet-toned bell that cost $300.00, but its echoing peals over the country side brought in only thirty-two active members by 1890. Men who served as ministers during this period, or were raised to this status in the church, were Stephen Leavitt of Meredith, New Hampshire, Stedman Cummings, A. D. Smith, Ezekiel True, Jr., Gilman Sanborn, N. K. George, John Norris, Jr., and H. F. Dickey.

Like many small churches whose fortunes rose or fell with business conditions and changes in population in the immediate neighborhood, the First Free Will Baptist Church struggled along until 1915 to support a full-time pastor. With the departure of Elder Howard the church depended on visiting ministers from bordering towns for occasional services, or student ministers in the summer. They had a double duty, as did some of their predecessors, when services were conducted here and at the Second Free Will Baptist Church, better known as the Meadow Meetinghouse, in South Corinth. The time came when this service was no longer available as old members died, leaving but a few to carry on the work. The edifice rapidly deteriorated, plaster falling from the walls, rain beating in through broken windows, and acts of vandalism and theft which made a sorry sight of the interior. The church became on eyesore to the few remaining families who remembered the days of prosperity in West Corinth before many of the houses were either destroyed by fire or allowed to collapse from general neglect.

In 1954 the Baptist Conference at Burlington sold the property to Alton Davis whose house, built by Jethro Sleeper in 1809 after he left the Corner, is located across the road. He removed the steeple, sold the pews to the Odd Fellows Society in Bradford, and the pulpit to the East Thetford Church. The bell was sold at private sale to an individual who agreed it would only be resold to another church of Protestant denomination. The church was converted to a dairy barn with cement floors and stanchions where today lowing cattle replace congregations whose voices were once united in prayer.

In the year 1830 the Rev. Nathaniel Bowles of the mother church in West Corinth started preaching weekly in private homes on the South Meadow and Dearborn Hill. The organization meeting was held in the Dearborn Hill Schoolhouse on December 15, 1832 under the guidance of Elder Bowles, with Joshua Folsom serving as Moderator and Stephen Leavitt, Clerk. Brothers Samuel Dearborn and Jeremiah Wright were elected Deacons, and David Bradbury, Clerk. In addition to these officers the following names are inscribed in the original record book (1832-1880) as charter members: Jonathan Roby (Robie), Henry Dearborn, John Rowell, Christopher Avery, Alvah Avery, Elias Avery, Asa Howe, Phineas Child, Asa Sandborn, David McConnel, Thomas Boardman, Henry Richardson, Alfred Ordway and Nathan Davis.

Over the next few years the sum of $1003 was raised by subscription by members residing in the neighborhood or on bordering farms in Vershire. Christopher Avery not only gave the land but a large part of the total cost of $2,000.00 for construction. The church held its first service on January 27, 1838 and members found it a blessed change from the schoolhouse, homes or barns formerly used.

The ministers or Elders are too numerous to list but from the organization of the Second Free Will Baptist Church, the membership was small and it was difficult for the church to maintain a full-time pastor. A few of the early ones were G. Sanborn, S. D. Smith, F. Moulton, M. Henderson, D. Sweet, G. W. Richardson, H. F. Dickey, S. Commings, O. Shipman, S. Perkins, F. Baldwin and L. Dewey. In 1888 when the Rev. J. D. Cross was the minister the statistics included a membership of sixty; their greatest number previous to that was eighty. The last full-time pastor left before 1920 and from then on occasional services were held during summer months for years thereafter.

A revival of interest in keeping the Meadow Meetinghouse open a greater share of the time was experienced in the late 1950's when Sunday School and prayer meetings were held Sunday evenings. In 1960 the present congregation painted the outside of the church, shutters were donated to replace broken ones, and the interior redecorated in the winter of 1962 exactly as stenciled by George Hopkins sixty years earlier. No structural changes have ever been made in the building which is still heated by ancient stoves, and in case of power failure can be lighted by oil lamps with reflectors and brackets spaced along the inner walls of the church. Since 1962 regular services have been held under different pastors for most of the year except in the coldest months of January, February and March. The present pastor is the Rev. Thomas Rose of West Fairlee.

In 1796 the Rev. Nicholas Snethens of Wilbraham, Massachusetts, a Methodist minister, arrived to preach at the home of John Langdon who lived over the line in Vershire. The first Methodist Episcopal Church in Orange County was organized at Corinth Corner in 1798 by this same John Langdon who had the distinction of being the first local preacher of this faith east of the Green Mountains. For the convenience of church members living in both towns a crude house of worship was built soon thereafter just beyond the Vershire line with the majority of pewholders living at the Corner.

Corinth members subscribed $2,000.00 to build their own church at the Corner in 1842. It was a duplication in many details of other meetinghouses in town and had a seating capacity of 150. Early ministers were for the most part born and educated in this part of town and included Peter Merrill, Amos Merrill, Samuel Heath and Abel Heath. Charter members were the families of pioneers who first settled at Corinth Corner.

In time this church too had difficulty in keeping a full-time pastor, its membership varying from a high of sixty-seven to a few dozen. Visiting ministers from Chelsea and other towns kept the church in existence for years. From 1939-1942 services were conducted in summer months by ministers on vacation at Journey's End on the road to Washington. There were too few people left to keep up interest in the church, some of the faithful workers moving away and others unable to assume the burden. The church followed the fate of the First Baptist Church at West Corinth, falling rapidly into ruins with windows shattered and vandals removing whatever met their fancy.

November 28, 1955 it was sold by the Troy Methodist Conference of Burlington to Albert Bugbee of town, with the stipulation that the steeple was to be removed before the building could be used for any purpose. He was converting the old church to an apartment for his own use when he died, willing the property to the Chelsea Health Center who in turn sold it to private parties in 1962. At present the building is idle.

Friction developed before the Union Meeting House at East Corinth was constructed in 1840 and discontented pewholders broke away, building a church of their own preference, the Second Methodist Episcopal Church, on the opposite side of the street. It stood at the edge of the road on part of what is now the south lawn of the Blake Memorial Library. Pewholders were from East Corinth, East Topsham, Topsham Branch, East Orange and West Topsham. The presiding elder was E. J. Scott; L. H. Farnum and Ezekiel Currier, local preachers; Horatio N. Taplin, exhorter; John Dearborn, Moses Little, James Lowden, stewards; Daniel Carter, Henry Humphrey, Timothy Cross and Richard Richardson, class leaders. Other charter members were Nathan Taplin, Ephraim Metcalf, Reuben Page, Gouldsburn Taplin, Andrew Downs, Andrew McFarland, Oliver Fellows, Michael Cross, Abel Burgin, Caleb Taplin and David Heath.

Elderly residents told of the race that developed between the two factions to see which church would be ready for services first. The Methodists probably won as their original record book states that their fiscal year ended July 1, 1841. In building swiftly they did not build well as their edifice was a derelict by 1870 when the church was rarely opened except for the funeral of an elderly parishioner. No repairs were ever made on the building and broken windows were boarded up to keep out young boys who delighted to play in the abandoned church if they could enter without being apprehended. In 1880 it was sold to George Taplin for one dollar by the acting Stewards of the defunct church. The building was moved to the Taplin property just south of it to be converted to a barn which can be seen today facing the village street, the shuttered church windows still outlined below the peaked roof. The property is now owned by Henry Metcalf.

A group of Seventh Day Adventists under the influence of Casper Moulton met in their several homes for prayer meetings and Bible study until organized into a church by Elder Kimball on October 17, 1886 at the Center. Charter members were the families of Casper Moulton, R. L. Foster, J. N. Foster, F. P. Munn, Benton R. Rowell, H. A. Thurber and Mrs. A. E. Barber. They continued meeting in homes until 1920 before becoming inactive. Interest was revived by Frank Moulton in 1940 with the assistance of his sons, Lester and Bernard. Their first official church meeting was held January 1, 1942 in the Lester Moulton house in a large room on the second floor which was formerly the assembly room of the old Rowe tavern. Their leaders were Elder Thurber of Williamstown and Elder Winiford Durrett of Barre. The Town House was purchased from the selectmen in 1948 and converted to a house of worship. Lester Moulton and his brother, Bernard, became Elders to carry on the teachings of the church which emphasizes observance of the Sabbath on the seventh day, temperance, rules of health and mission work. The church is now closed in winter, members attending services in Barre. At present Elder Keslake of St. Johnsbury comes every other Saturday through the summer to conduct services. In his absence either their local pastor, Bernard Moulton, or Elder Durrett of Barre are in charge, often exchanging pulpits with each other in their respective towns. The present membership of the Seventh Day Adventists of Corinth is nine.

The restrictions of the early churches of Corinth may seem stringent today as dancing, card-playing and worldly frivolities were frowned upon by many church members who enjoyed the simple pleasures provided by the singing schools, quilting bees, barn raisings, local forums and community gatherings. There are a few still living who can remember when the abandoned churches were filled with people gathered from their own ranks and nearby districts for worship, or programs supplied by home talent.

Population shifts and modern transportation over improved roads were partially responsible for the decline of the small church whose rural activities no longer sufficed in a changing world. But for generations the neighborhood church was influential in the lives of a religious people who conscientiously obeyed the commands of God, strengthening a moral fiber that is inherent in their decendants.

The Little White Schoolhouse

THE FIRST SCHOOL, like the first church, was a neighborhood enterprise in which a group of families joined together to have their children taught collectively rather than individually, once the arduous years of resettlement were past. Prior to this time, intelligent parents had assumed the responsibility of teaching their children at home. The log cabin or sheltering branches of a tree in pleasant weather were adequate until a schoolhouse could be built by joint endeavor.

Corinth District School

Similar ventures, undoubtedly, started in other parts of town but the earliest school of which there is any definite record was kept in southeast Corinth on the property of David McKeen who had four young children when he built his sawmill on the Branch in 1779. When his large barn was built about a decade later the town was concerned with investigating and procuring the school right in the Publick Lands, to have a survey made. To William Fellows and Benjamin Muzzey fell the task of dividing the town into as many "school destrects as they judged would best comidate the town" in 1789. The name of Miss Betsey Morrison is the first to be given as a teacher in the McKeen barn where she taught reading from the New England Primer and the Bible, Pike's arithmetic, grammar, writing and spelling. Children were going to be taught all their parents knew, and more if possible. They so thoroughly learned the alphabet and Lord's Prayer, frontwards and backwards, that all their lives long they could recite them rapidly either way.

In the beginning the district school was run exclusively by its own particular neighborhood without any supervision or support from town, county or state. It was an independent power, a law unto itself, building and owning the schoolhouse, appointing a Prudential Committee to raise and collect school taxes, holding annual meetings, and fighting like ravening wolves over its operation.

So far as known the first appropriation for support of schools was voted in town meeting on March 15, 1792 when forty pounds were raised, to be paid in wheat at five shillings per bushel, each district to have its proportion of money if a school was kept. Two weeks later Jacob Sleeper, Bracket Towle, David McKeen, Charles Crook, Edward Robie and Benjamin Muzzey were elected the first trustees of town schools to alter districts, hear grievances and dispense the apportionment. Again in 1795 and 1796 sixty pounds were raised. Mansfield Taplin, Sr., Richard Sawyer and Daniel Wood, who were ordered to "sitel" with the school trustees, figured the apportionment at 13 pounds, 8 shillings for each district and received the following certificates of expenditures on January 19, 1797:

District 1: Peter Sleeman, 1795, 12 pounds, 9 shillings
District 2: David McKeen, 1792, 12 pounds, 9 shillings
District 3: John Nutting, 1795, 14 pounds, 17 shillings
District 4: Charles Crook, 1792, 14 pounds, 17 shillings
District 5: Bracket Towle, 1792, 12 pounds

The districts increased to 13 by 1807 and within 20 years totaled 18, with all the inhabitants north of the Meetinghouse lot brook, including the families of David Locke and Ira Towle, formed into a single district.

For the next two years, 1797-98, $200.00 was voted for support of schools. When the taxpayers discovered at March meeting in 1799 that the school tax of the previous year was still uncollected, they refused to raise a penny for education. The Dark Age of the town was reached in 1800 when both preaching and school support were voted down, the latter winning by a narrow margin in 1801 when $500.00 was voted, reconsidered and reaffirmed after a heated poll was taken. The year 1804 would be the last time the townspeople voted against the school appropriation.

In 1802 it was voted to raise $1500.00 over a period of 12 years after commencement of an Orange County Grammar School. "if the General Assembly should see fit to set the stake in Corinth." The stake must be fixed within two miles of the center of town if the State was interested in doing business with the townspeople. It wasn't, to the delight of 37 opponents of the proposal. For the next 50 years and more $500.00 to $800.00, usually the latter amount, were voted annually without dissention. During these years school districts were subdivided or combined upon request of people residing in a particular neighborhood, or families were set off to a more convenient locality, sometimes over the border in the neighboring towns of Vershire, Orange or Washington, until they reached a total of 24, and a Union District.

It was not until 1813 that the state legislature passed a law relating to a general school fund to be raised by a tax on the Grand List, usually amounting to 11¢ in addition to what the law allowed, for a total of 20¢ on the dollar, with the Town Treasurer authorized to distribute the money to each school district according to the number of scholars. This bill was introduced into the House of Representatives by Nicholas Hale of Corinth who located here in 1790 to promote the best interests of the growing town. He was an extremely intelligent man, well acquainted with the religious and political conditions in the United States and Europe. During the years 1813 and 1814 he worked for enactment of his bill for the support of common schools. The sentiment of this law was "that the rich paid the money for education of the poor man's children" and it remained on the statute books of Vermont for more than forty years.

The payment of school money to each district by the town treasurer eliminated the responsibility of local collection, but beyond that point the town had little power in the running of its schools. Each district elected a Treasurer to disburse the apportionment which varied in amount according to the number of scholars registered in the school. This created jealousy among the smaller and less thriving districts who were unable to compete either in length of the school year, which was divided into four terms of spring, summer, fall and winter, or quality of teachers employed in the more populous areas of town. Never were all the district schools in session simultaneously, many of them having only one term yearly.

Records taken from an old journal kept by Darling District No. 13, located in the Maplewood neighborhood, are given here for a true picture of the quarrelsome problems of the early schools in general. At a district meeting on January 8, 1816 a new Prudential Committee was elected: Jonathan Rawlins, Moderator; Ezekiel True, Clerk and Treasurer; Derwel Wright and John Darling, board members; all ordered to settle with the former committee. On November 12 they met again to vote $12.00 for repairs of the schoolhouse which included fixing the walls and the overhead. A winter term of 12 weeks was approved.

Two weeks later they agreed to support the fire for No. 13 and "get the wood according to the number of scholars that is sent to school." David Berry bid $1.40 per week for the School Master's board and $16.80 was voted for that purpose. The wood at $1.08 per cord would be brought on to the schoolhouse lot by Jonathan Rawlins who thought 3 cords a great sufficiency as he had to "cord it up to fit the fire." When they met again on December 16 they reconsidered the Master's board; instead of raising the money in the district it would come out of town funds to which they were entitled under the 1813 law. November 15, 1817 they voted in favor of a winter term again but this time the Master would be hired "as long as the money lasts." They gave the Master no choice in the matter when they decided to send him around to board with the inhabitants to reduce their portion of the school tax. The wood was to be obtained through a chopping bee and ordered to be on the spot two days before the opening of school on the first Monday in January.

A schoolmarm was first engaged on May 15, 1818 to teach a summer term of 2 months, her board to be taken out of town money. She was given no leeway either as the Prudential Committee agreed to "set up the boarding of the teacher to the lowest bidder." Jonathan Rawlins vowed he'd do it, or rather his wife would, for 64¢ per week. The winter winds of the past few years had raised hob with No. 13 and $11.50 was set aside for repairs, Rawlins to do the work. Before adjournment they voted to purchase a stove to heat the schoolhouse instead of using the old fireplace. When they met on October 17 trouble was brewing because Rawlins had made no repairs on the school. William Bowen offered to do the work for the same amount and it was so voted. On January 4, 1819 a winter term of 2½ months was approved, as were the repairs by Bowen.

The following winter, school was in session for three months with the stipulation that not only must the fuel be cut and corded to fit the fire, but be of good sound wood. There would be no more green wet stuff delivered on the schoolhouse lot. The scholar's quota of wood was for the first time placed at 1½ feet each. No record was made of the number of scholars attending the winter term, so the size of the woodpile remains a mystery.

As time went on the wood quota per scholar increased to 2 feet which placed a big strain on the schoolhouse chimney when both it and the building were repaired in 1822 at a cost of $11.50. Elden Davidson was hired as Master for the winter term of 1824 and he too must continue in the path of his predecessors by boarding amongst the inhabitants according to the number of scholars, meaning that the family with the greatest number of children in school had the privilege of keeping the Master the longer time. The winters were growing colder too as 2½ feet of wood were now reckoned for each scholar. Someone was caught cheating a few years later when the Prudential Committee engaged a surveyor to measure the wood brought on to the school lot. By 1831 3 feet of wood was the requirement per child in proof that the winters were either growing colder or the scholars less rugged to withstand the blasts of air whistling through the cracks of old District No. 13. The schoolhouse must have been drafty as a sieve in 1834 when 4 feet of wood was the ruling.

Repairs on the building were continually discussed until November, 1835 when J. Litch and A. H. Boardman were appointed to find the center of the district. The rumor of a new schoolhouse grew into fact after the Prudential Committee met on February 19, 1836 to vote the schoolhouse should be located on the east side of Darling Brook. The old building was to be set up at auction and sold to the lowest bidder to move it away. On the 11th of March they decided they had been too hasty and voted not to choose a committee to say where the new schoolhouse should set; the old one would be reserved for the use of a summer school, its "avails" when sold to apply on the expenses of the new building. T. S. Poore's plan was preferred "for the form of a new house." Everyone was happy to learn the house was to be finished for the reception of school by the first of December, 1836. The carpenter was required to give bond for the faithful building of said house, a third of the money to be paid in June and the remainder upon completion. The low bid of $105.00 presented by James Litch was accepted but he wasn't entirely left to his own devices as Elden Bowles was appointed a committee of one to superintend the work to make sure a first-class job was done.

No bells rang out in rejoicing for the proud dedication of a new school on December 1. At a special meeting of the whole district in November it was agreed that there would be no winter term of school; in fact, the building was in such disrepair it was not fit for cattle, much less children. The new one wasn't started and there was no place suitable to hold a winter session. They were undismayed, however, and again voted to build a new school, electing Joshua Merrill and Ephraim Ward, Esq., to designate the location for it.

These gentlemen reported back that it should be located about or near six rods distant southeasterly from the southwest corner of the farm owned and possessed by Sydney Thurber on Orange Road so-called.

The least that can be said for Contractor Litch is that he was no coward when he again bid a price of $105.00 the following year to build the school. More bickering, no school! The over-worked clerk of District No. 13 was very discouraged when he scratched with his pen at the bottom of the page on which the record was kept for 1837, "poor ink, poor pen, poor writing, Amen." A new year dawned in 1838 but no new building, old school not moved. However, the Prudential Board did vote $13.00 to buy a new stove and pipe to replace the rusty wood-burner purchased 19 years earlier. By now it too was ready to fall apart with the ramshackle schoolhouse. For another twelve months things were at a stand-still while the scholars scampered fearlessly over the shaky floor of No. 13.

In the spring of 1840 they voted to build the schoolhouse across Darling Brook and accepted Hiram Fisk's bid of $119.00 for the job which must be completed by the middle of November. Samuel Darling bought the old schoolhouse for $5.50 with the understanding that the District was to have the use of it for a summer term. Fisk had to get his "sugarin" done and crops planted to give the people time to think things over before they met on June 10 to consider locating the school on an entirely different spot recommended by the selectmen who had been called in to settle the quarrel. They calculated it would be wise to appoint a committee to investigate purchase of the land designated by the Town Fathers. The committee in turn called a meeting of the district to vote on the site which ended in a tie. Summer days had a soothing effect on the warring factions as application was made on September 2 to the selectmen to approve another site on David Clement's land, south side of the road leading by Samuel Darling's place, about 24 rods from David Clement's dwelling which was near a ledge. The selectmen graciously concurred with their choice.

The School Committee and the district were in happy accord for the first time and Hiram Fisk prepared to go forward with the construction. Naturally the building was not ready by the middle of November as Hiram had to harvest his crops and bank his dwelling for the winter months. He probably wished he had never been involved with the schoolhouse project when the School Committee reported to the legal voters of District No. 13 on the 18th day of December that they did not think the construction had been done in good workmanlike manner, neither did it stand where the district voted it should. They would not accept the building. Consternation, recriminations, then reconsideration of their decision on the 23rd. Full of good will toward men, the day after Christmas they voted to accept the new school when Hiram agreed to "throw off" five dollars, reducing his bill to $114.00. At long last, after five years of wrangling and waiting, their troubles were over. They had a new school and harmony should reign, but it didn't. Two months later the voters of the district were called to a special meeting to see if they would raise money to underpin the building. They met and passed over the Article to enter other phases of turbulent school history.

In winter when there was less work to be done on the farms, boys and young men were more or less faithful in school attendance. Ages of pupils ranged from 4 to 18 years, even 21 in a few cases. Some quit while young and others left to be married. Before 1800 men were mainly hired as teachers with a minister or lawyer occasionally serving as instructor for a few terms. In some districts if a man furnished his own board he might receive ten dollars a month in salary. Rates for a female teacher during a summer term, which could run from late June through August, averaged $14.00 to $16.00 for the entire session with a teaching schedule of six days per week. Her board and room ranged from 75¢ to $1.00 weekly unless she provided food and shelter for herself. Oftentimes this item was bid off by farmers in the district as payment toward their school tax. Her title was schoolmarm, not teacher, school mistress or dame. A good schoolmarm taught, inspired and chastened, went coasting, sleigh riding, skating, with her pupils, even climbed hills and mountains if it was asked of her. She attended picnics, donation parties, apple parings, quilting bees and all church functions. Her character and conduct were on trial at all times and if she had a life of her own, it was within the privacy of the cold spare room of the house where she boarded. More often she had to share a bed with several young children of the family.

The larger district schools at times numbered 100 scholars with no uniformity in text books. At one time District No. 1 on Taplin Hill had 31 scholars and a teacher all by the name of Taplin. The pupils brought from home such books as the family owned and these fortunate children were placed in different classes to share their books with others. It often worked out that the teacher heard a pupil's lesson separately when there was only one reading book or geography on loan. Penmanship was taught, the teacher mending the points of turkey quills to be dipped in home-made ink. Not every child had a hornbook or slate, and paper was too expensive to be used in school in the earlier days. Birch bark served as a fair substitute. The few text books available might include Fisher's Arithmetic which was brought into Vermont in the 1770's to help in the study of surveying, Webster's spelling book and Morse's Geography.

The early district school had walls of logs or planks, loose movable

benches made of slabs of wood, and rows of crude desks around the walls. Boys and girls sat on opposite sides of the room but were seated alternately on the recitation bench to keep the boys in order. Unless a teacher was very strict and maintained discipline on opening day, the poor soul did not last long as there are many local tales of by-gone days when the older boys locked the teacher out of the schoolhouse or tossed the Master out of a door or window. It was a wise teacher who dealt the first blow whether by strap or ferule.

Some of our early schools ranked high scholastically, with a few teachers very thorough in the teaching of the three R's and capable of giving special courses in algebra and geometry, Latin or Greek. They were handicapped by the scarcity of materials as some of the district schools a century ago lacked blackboards, suitable seats and desks, text books, maps or globes. Many of the one-room buildings were poorly constructed, with leaky roofs and loose boards through which the snow drifted, making the schoolhouse hard to heat. Occasionally there was a teacher who was not qualified for the position, knowing little more than the brightest scholar who was at a double disadvantage with a poor instructor and the shortness of the session. As this type of teacher was not required by the Prudential Board to pass a written examination to test his or her ability, and had been to little expense to prepare for the position, not much was expected in return for the pittance paid. The district school was fortunate when it could hire an educated man capable of teaching advanced subjects in science and mathematics. Discipline was never a problem when a minister was in charge of the school as children from the roughest of homes stood in awe of the clergy and were on their best behavior in his presence.

Boys might attend the district school for a single term during the winter when work eased on the farm or in the mill, yet they became capable men under the strict training of their fathers who were ingenuous beyond their duties as farmers. They could build a chimney, fashion a piece of furniture, make or repair shoes, shoe a horse, and turn their hands to many manual tasks unrelated to farm chores. A few of them came out of the district school well-educated for their day going directly into college and seemingly having little trouble keeping up in their studies. They invariably spoke a pure English, colloquial as it might be, and were able to argue or discourse in clear, concise fashion on many subjects. They were benefited in this regard by the strict Sabbath instructions of those years under educated preachers who delivered hour-long sermons twice on Sunday and expected children to be attentive, remembering what they were told. Their Bible lessons had to be learned word for word which helped them to develop memory training and a familiarity with grammar at its best.

Fewer girls attended school regularly when the district schools were first established but all were taught to cook, weave and sew at home, and "readin' and ritin' were enough book larnin' in school." The exception was when ambitious parents took over where the district school left off and personally encouraged additional study in their families. The only occupations open to girls after they completed their education in the district school were teaching, sewing, domestic work and care of the sick, all poorly paid jobs. Actually tailoresses and seamstresses were better paid than teachers, and much more independent, but they often took their pay in farm produce or home-woven cloth.

These primitive district schools from the first were used for neighborhood gatherings, both religious and social, and this custom continued into the early decades of the 20th century in the better-constructed little white schoolhouses that replaced them. Many church services and prayer meetings were held in the district school when the bitter cold of winter kept the church building closed. The singing school, spelldowns, box socials, and the lyceum met here, the whole family attending from infant to aged. The lyceums were a very popular form of neighborhood entertainment when people gathered at the district school in early evening with teacher serving as moderator. The meeting usually opened with a few songs and "pieces" that had been rehearsed by the scholars. Poetry or prose, sad and humorous, were always enjoyed and many a tear was unashamedly wiped away at the recitation of a tragic rhyme. Because life was grim, sentimental or doleful contributions, with appropriate gestures, were appreciated at these affairs.

The usual paper was read that contained news items of a humorous nature, poking fun at local residents. The subject for debate had been agreed upon earlier, two men taking opposite sides, each choosing a partner. Then the teams would present their facts, the audience deciding the winners by oral vote A favorite subject was "Which is Better, the District or the Private School?" The district school supporters always won, regardless of how good an argument was delivered by their opponents. Everyone was firmly convinced that nothing in the field of education would ever equal the advantages of the district school. Before the lyceum ended a committee was appointed to plan the next one a few weeks later.

For the scholars who desired further education beyond the district school college was usually out of the question for the majority of them as money was a scarcity in many families. If one desired to become a doctor, lawyer or minister he would place himself under the tutelage of a man already established in the preferred profession and continue his studies or training until qualified to carry on alone. The more fortunate ones managed a few terms of college before starting their careers. If his ambition led to teaching locally, a pupil could prove his ability by passing the oral examination at the completion of the course of study provided in the district school. Members of the Prudential Committee did not always hire the best teacher at a higher salary, but often accepted one less qualified at a lower rate to pare expenses, thus exposing themselves to bitter criticism. District school politics and policies provided endless arguments and were the cause of more local quarrels than anything else in town.

There were no superintendents of schools until 1830 when the movement was introduced in some sections of the state and allowed to fall into disuse until revived in the mid-1840's. In 1846 the Rev. Solon Martin was appointed Superintendent of Common Schools in Corinth without a salary, or power to do anything more than visit each school in town at least once a year. When the state law required that a town superintendent of schools be appointed at March meeting in 1850, Chester M. Prescott was elected at a salary of $10.00. His duties included the examination of those who wished to teach and distribution of certificates to successful candidates, also supervision of all the district schools in town. H. H. Gillett, Superintendent of Common Schools for the town of Corinth, summarized the poor condition of the majority of them in his printed report of 1860. District No. 17 and the Academy were not included. The unnamed districts listed could have been the Lovewell, Dearborn Hill, Clement or Norris schools whose district numbers are not recorded.

District No. 1, Taplin Hill. Two terms of 12 weeks, scholars not advanced, unfavorable circumstances of teachers, conduct medium.

District No. 2, Roswell Crook. 18 weeks of school, 8 in summer and 10 in winter. District contains territory, scholars and money sufficient to have at least 6 to 8 months of school yearly. Summer term tolerably successful, order lacking in winter term. Larger scholars took advantage of the teacher's youth and inexperience, not his fault. No. 2 needs to wake up in the cause of common schools

District No. 3, Cookeville. 10 weeks of summer term good, order and progress excellent, marked advancement in reading and spelling. Winter term poor. A teacher of energy and firmness needed to manage hard boys. Abundant material for a first-rate school 8 months of year.

District No. 4, Corinth Corner. First rank in town, excellent teachers, scholars made good and thorough progress in all branches taught. Attendance most regular in town, setting an excellent example for other districts.

District No. 5, Robie. Scholars small and irregular in attendance during summer term. First teacher of winter term withdrew at end of 4 weeks, second teacher, female, giving general satisfaction. Schoolhouse calculated to make scholars noisy.

District No. 6, West Corinth. Largest number of scholars in town, summer and winter terms both successful. Order good and progress fair in most primary branches. More interest of the right kind outside the schoolhouse would do no damage. A number of advanced scholars here.

West Corinth District School

District No. 7, no name. Smallest school in town, one term of 12 weeks, scholars very indifferent, teacher young but did as well as expected.

District No. 8, Eaton. Ranks in scholarship above average in town. Summer term quite successful, order fair, standing good, general appearance of school acceptable. Winter term of 10 weeks very satisfactory.

District No. 9, McCrillis (Pike Hill in 1876). No school during year, therefore none of the public money. Recommend the selectmen break up this district and attach its different members to adjoining districts.

District No. 10, Hodge. Same teacher for several terms, standing fair.

District No. 11, Chubb Hollow. 1 term of 12 weeks. Teacher kept one of the best governed and instructed schools in town. Progress excellent.

District No. 12, P. M. Hastings. Less than 10 scholars, 1 winter term of 12 weeks. Tolerable progress, standing of school below average.

District No. 13, Darling. Quite well managed, standing not high but order good, marked progress in reading and spelling.

District No. 14, Charles Hansom. Smallest school in town; on account of illness among scholars, it had but 9 weeks of school. Books are as necessary as a teacher.

Eaton District School

District No. 15, George Wilson. Prospered in some respects, standing rather low, order medium. This district has much reason to find fault with its teachers during past year, scholars cannot help but be uneasy in such a schoolhouse. Summer term 8 weeks, winter 12.

District No. 16, Goose Green. Makes a hard show on paper. 11 scholars in summer term, average daily attendance 7. Winter term no better. Irregular attendance fatal to prosperity of any school. Parents, complain not too much of your teachers until you perform your own part more faithfully. I advise No. 16 to build a new schoolhouse and commence anew, or disorganize.

District No. 18, no name. Summer term short, scholars small. Winter term 12 weeks not successful, difficulty with some larger scholars seriously damaged the school. Parents, beware how you take the part of your children against their teacher before you have investigated the difficulty yourselves. Teachers, use discretion but firmness in government. You will need much more sympathy than you get outside of the schoolhouse.

District No. 19, East Corinth. Second largest school in town, standing hardly medium. School has been favored with good teachers through year who have advanced the school as well as could be expected with such irregular attendance. Parents, look well to your boys; see that they go to the schoolhouse instead of the taverns and stores.

District No. 20, Corinth Center. School small but in standing compares well with other schools in town. Same teacher during year. Most of the scholars interested in their studies and made commendable progress.

District No. 21, J. M. Richardson. Ranks well with other schools, summer term very successful, taught by one of the most experienced and thorough teachers in town. Winter term unfortunate, owing to prejudice among some of the large boys before school commenced, and trouble with them during term, progress seriously affected. Parents and guardians, give sympathy to your teacher until you find him unworthy. Teachers, never engage to teach school with opposition or prejudice before you commence, especially in your own district. Such schools result in injury to the pupils, district and the teacher.

District No. 22, no name. Standing of this school good for small scholars. Summer term tolerably successful, winter term thorough progress made in elementary branches. The class in geography best in town.

District No. 23, South Meadow. One of the large schools in town, summer term partially successful, too much confusion interfered with progress of school. Same applies to winter term, standing medium. No. 23 should hire male teacher for their winter school who possesses good common sense and physical ability to govern, even if it becomes necessary to use force.

District No. 24, Joseph Knight. One of the most pleasant schools in town, scholars studious and orderly, in scholarship they rank above the average in our schools. Progress fair in summer for small scholars, in winter teacher and pupils interested, progress marked and order good.

Union District No. 1. School prospered in summer, order, progress and standing good. In winter the teacher was too young and inexperienced to manage the large, lawless boys. A teacher of considerable physical strength and experience needed here.

Comments made by the superintendent at the end of his report drew attention to the new state law whereby school money was to be divided according to average daily attendance, not by numbers of scholars registered as in the past. Many of the schools needed plastering, new ceilings and outside repairs, including No. 13. Nos. 16, 5, 10 and 11 should be torn down and replaced with new buildings, or thoroughly repaired. No outline maps or globes were available in many of the schools and one building lacked a blackboard. In his opinion the schoolhouse should not suffer in comparison to the dwelling houses in the district, either for comfort and convenience within, or order and neatness without. He recommended a decrease in school districts, and discretion by the Prudential Committees in the selection of teachers, advising them it was better to have a good teacher instead of a cheap school. The over-all standard of scholarship in town was below average, the majority of children not realizing the importance of an education. Many of them spent more time out of school than in.

His closing remarks to all parents in town urged them to visit the schoolroom often, co-operate with the teachers, see that the children were diligent and studious and put an end to idle gossip which was often circulated by ill-disposed scholars and recirculated by news-mongers to the detriment of the schools. Other evils were present but these he did not dwell upon, asking only for lively interest from every one for the best welfare of Country, State and Town.

The Corinth Academical Institute and County Grammar School was incorporated in the fall of 1846 by an act of legislature and surpassed the district school that had for many years been adequate for the community. Four terms of school, 11 weeks long, were conducted during the year but many of the scholars did not attend each consecutive term. All branches of English, Latin and Greek were taught along with Music, Drawing, Vocal Music, and Thorough Base. Their catalog of 1847 listed no courses in mathematics or science but they must have been provided by the teaching staff of five. Over 170 pupils were listed from 13 Vermont towns including Corinth, several towns or cities in the states of Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and 1 from

Old Corinth Academy, Cookeville

Detroit, Michigan. They boarded in private homes to increase the prosperity in the center of town.

In 1867 the legislature approved a bill making it compulsory for every child of good health and strong mind, between the ages of 8 and 14 years, to attend school for at least 3 months of the year, unless privately educated. No child beween these ages could be employed in any mill or factory unless such child had already attended a public school for 3 months in the preceding year. Violations were subject to fines not less than $10.00 or more than $20.00. Towns were also authorized to establish central schools and to assist indigent young men and women to qualify themselves for the profession of teaching.

At March meeting in 1871 the Town of Corinth voted to abolish the district school system, electing their first board of school directors. Serving 3 years were C. C. Sargent, and F. P. Eaton; 2 years, A. S. Corliss and B. F. Aikens; 1 year, Hiram Carleton and S. W Davis. Two weeks later they voted to rescind the action of adopting the town system of common schools as recommended by the State, but Rev. C. M. Winch, Congregational minister at the Center, vehemently protested that it was illegal for them to do so as the vote was taken on a day not provided by law. On February 8, 1872 at a special town meeting the voters instructed the town agent to legalize their action of the previous year to reinstate the antiquated district system. The following year printed town reports covering all phases of town business were prepared by the selectmen and auditors and distributed for the first time to all legal voters a few weeks in advance of March meeting. The report of the chairman of the school board was adopted and the district school of the past was definitely on its way out, although clerks were elected for the twenty-five schools in town.

District No. 21 was in trouble in 1874 when its Prudential Committee refused to maintain a school. A new committee was immediately appointed by the selectmen who ordered them to conduct school in the district for no less than 20 weeks. In August, 1881, the selectmen found District No. 5 grossly negligent in not providing a suitable school and ordered a new schoolhouse built, ready for use within six months. To enforce their command, the Sheriff of Orange County was requested to see that the school was built in the prescribed time by serving an order to that effect on the school district. From 1876 onward many of the old district schools were granted permission to join with other districts to drastically reduce by half the number of schools in town. The school on the road to Page Hill was allowed to close that year, its pupils attending No. 19 in East Corinth Village.

On November 1, 1879 the school board voted to purchase standard text books for use in all the schools of Corinth to conform with schools throughout the State. February 1, 1890 the Orange County Board of Education announced a list of text books to be used in the public schools of the county for a period of five years. The list included Lippincott's New Series of Readers, Ellsworth's Writing Books, the Normal Course of Spelling, Hyde's First Lessons in English, Patterson's Elements of Grammar and Composition, Harper's Geographies, Greenleaf's Arithmetic, Krusi's Drawing Books, Eggleston's History of the United States and Conant's Geography and History of Vermont. The Board also recommended the Normal Music Course and Conant's Drill Book. In 1895 the town announced that bound books had been purchased, labeled and numbered in the Town School System as prescribed by law.

In 1896 announcement was made that after June of that year text books would be furnished free to the public schools of town. Children already supplied with standard books at their parents' expense could not be allowed anything for them, or have new ones until the old ones were worn out. Suitable instruction must be provided for all children in town, no matter where they resided, and the law required free transportation should be furnished, so far as practicable, to give them equal advantages for acquiring an education, all at public expense.

The last few decades of the 19th century brought a tremendous change in the school system, benefiting pupils and improving educational standards. The old district school that for well over a century had ruled itself, received its death blow in 1892 when it was succeeded by the town system by act of legislature. All schools in town were placed under three school directors, with a minimum of 30 weeks of school each year. Over a period of 25 years compulsory school attendance had increased from 12 weeks to 30. These changes added to the expense of running the town schools but the benefits were inestimable.

School funds remaining in each district school were to be turned over to the town treasurer. Law-abiding District No. 1 on Taplin Hill immediately complied with the ruling, their last report reading: "We, the legal voters, do find that District No. 1 met March 28, 1893 to settle all accounts of their district school, instructing their Treasurer to divide the surplus money in the district according to the Grand List of the town." The final action taken was to request the new board of school directors to sustain a schoolhouse on Taplin Hill before members of the Prudential Committee signed their names for the last time: Frank Taplin, Clerk; William Taplin, Treasurer; J. H. Carter, Moderator; C. H. Metcalf, Committeeman.

The same cannot be said of some of the other districts in town that were publicly acclaimed by a local citizen in a newspaper article dated November 23, 1894, who referred to a statement printed earlier that "the real true down-to-bottom objection to the town school system is that it deprives so many of a chance to hold a little office; many a man who couldn't get elected hog constable at town meeting could be on the skule kermitty." Infuriated he replied, "As I am one of the hornets spoken of, I wish to say it is a poor rule that will not work both ways. The real, right-down-and-get-there of the town school system is to give office to a few smart men that cannot get elected selectmen or hog constable either (the honor is about the same), but can be elected one of the board of school directors. We have got plenty of crazy laws now and want no more of them. It would be better for the state if the legislature would let the school laws alone."

A rebuttal was printed the following week by an unnamed resident of Corinth who defended the new town school system, saying "our schools in town are in fine condition, indications are that a wise selection of instructors have been engaged and much good work is expected. One very noticeable fact in regard to the working of the new law is that it does away with many of the old district quarrels. We hear less in opposition to the law than formerly." He then attacked the school board calling them "knocked-kneed directors who do not think it is part of their duty to collect the surplus school money remaining in the old districts as we know it is they and not the selectmen who have the power to do so." In a mellow mood he terminated his comments with the statement that "no one can fail to see an improvement in the schools in the past two years. The idea has struck parents with convincing force that the way to raise the grade of education for children in our home schools is to raise the grade of our teachers."

He was referring to the new requirements for teachers which banned acceptance of grammar school students into the normal schools to lower the standards of admission. From now on only high school graduates would be accepted, boys at age of 17 and girls 16, free of disease or infirmity to make them unfit for teaching, of good moral standing and evidence of intellectual capacity. They must pass examinations covering languages, mathematics, history, geography, science, music and drawing with special emphasis being placed on English as no candidate for Normal School would be accepted whose language was slovenly or ungrammatical.

The school children were delighted when the legislature decreed in November, 1894 that the "last half-day's session of the public schools before Memorial Day, (legally sanctioned in 1868), shall be devoted to exercises commemorative of the history of this nation during the War of the Rebellion, and to patriotic instruction in the principles of liberty and the equal rights of man." It was a pleasant custom that drew parents to the schoolhouse to hear patriotic recitations and songs by pupils before they marched to the cemetery in their locality to place flags on the graves of all war veterans. In recent years the custom has been discontinued, except for decorating the graves, and "patriotic instructions" as outlined in the law are no longer an important part of the school curriculum.

Throughout all the history of Corinth private schools were conducted for a few terms or years by educated men and women who taught advanced courses in science, mathematics, English, Latin and Greek. Singing schools also provided instructions in vocal music, piano or organ, mandolin, guitar, banjo and violin. Corinth High School, or Cookeville Academy, suffered reverses over the years, being reduced to one high school teacher and one grammar school instructor when the last class graduated in 1910. There were so few high school students in the lower classes by the end of the school year in 1912 that the town voted to send them to Bradford Academy to complete their courses. A portion of the tuition was paid by the town and the balance by the parents, the students to have the privilege of attending the high school of their choice. From 1948 on the town voted to pay full tuition at Bradford Academy, or the same amount to any other institution selected by the student.

On Tuesday, December 14, 1921 the present school building at East Corinth was opened for classes, following a disastrous fire which completely destroyed the one built in 1873 on the site of the old Eagle Hotel. Previous to this, the first school had been located across the road.

In September of 1924 local students attending Bradford Academy were taking advantage of the two stages daily to travel back and forth to high school, while a few others either boarded themselves in Bradford or worked in private homes to earn their rooms and meals. In a few years a regular school bus, under private ownership, was furnished for transportation to Bradford, the expense borne by the parents as it is today. Until September, 1964 school books were an additional item of expense for students attending Bradford Academy, also the hot lunches at noon. There is a heavy financial burden on families with a number of children attending high school at the same time. Great sacrifices are made by the parents of Corinth students to meet the extra costs of high school education; for some they are prohibitive which adds to the drop-out problem increasing among this age group.

During World War II the scattered schools of Corinth were gradually closed, starting with Taplin Hill and then Pike Hill whose pupils were transported to East Corinth. In the fall of 1947 for the first time all the school children in town were transported either to the Cookeville School or East Corinth, under a plan carried out by school directors John Pierson, Sr.,

Present East Corinth Graded School

Lawrence Jackman and William Devens. The East Corinth School was enlarged to four classrooms, one of which was later converted to a school cafeteria with adjoining kitchen for the serving of hot lunches. They also purchased the vacant store at Cookeville, located diagonally across the common from the old Academy building, and remodeled it into a modern school with three classrooms and kitchen. Three teachers were employed in each of the schools and this practice continues today.

The present board of school directors, John Pierson, Jr., Guy Miller and Mrs. Alden Slack appointed a Study Group Steering Committee to attend a regional meeting at Bradford Academy on January 17, 1964 to investigate the feasibility of a future Union District School, or regional high school, for grades VII through XII, to accommodate students living within a fifteen-mile radius of Bradford. An area vocational high school is also being considered as surveys show there is a great need for this type of education throughout the state.

Area survey sheets are provided to make a comprehensive study of the schools in town for the past ten years, starting at elementary level, with definite guide lines to be followed by the numerous towns interested in a project to provide the same educational advantages in the rural areas as those offered in the cities and larger towns of Vermont. The project is in the study stage only and it will be several years before any definite plan can be considered to place our schools on a par with Burlington or Barre.

Whatever improves our schools and stimulates interest in higher education for the children of Corinth is an investment in their future. It is our responsibility to provide the tools to make them successful citizens in the ever-changing world of tomorrow.

First Agriculture, Then Industry

THERE WAS one time in the history of Corinth when every man was a farmer no matter what his background before coming here. Rich or poor they entered town the same way, afoot pulling hand sledges, by ox-team, and some on horseback if they could pick a path through the forest without dismounting. Most of them came in winter when the rivers were frozen so heavy loads could slip easily along the ice and roads leading toward the wilderness were at their best. Yeoman or teacher, the land came first, clearance of a plot for cabin and garden. The charter recognized this fact when it set aside 100 acres of land for the schoolmaster to live on and teach. If he ate he toiled like the rest of the settlers. For the few who bought pitched land, the majority found great forests that could only be cleared by their own efforts. There were no taverns nearby where food and shelter could be found but fish and game were plentiful to complement the few supplies brought in with them until they harvested their first crops.

They cleared brush with fire and axe, knowing that the quickest way to reclaim the land was by girdling trees with axes and leaving the sap to drain. In a year they were ready for burning to supply the pearlash or salts which they or the traders would send down country along with other cash goods of wheat, furs, medicinal roots and surplus cloth. Long low pungs, drawn by six to eight horses, would haul these products to the markets of Boston, Salem or Portsmouth where they were exported to Europe. Certainly there was no demand locally as every settlement in town had the same goods, self-sufficing and independent of each other.

Indian corn which grew rapidly and abundantly was planted between the stumps of trees, the latter burned and left to rot until they could be crushed and mixed in with the soil. Buckwheat and rye were among the first crops that would thrive in virgin soil but wheat would have to wait a couple of years to be sown in their place to avoid lush growth which shot up too quickly to terminate in spikes of grain. Oats and barley were raised, apple trees set out, and grass seed mixed with wheat to provide shade. They planned to take two crops only from the land after it was broken up before seeding to grass, sewing wheat in the spring, sometimes in the fall, and mixing herd grass with clover for their animals. Flax was sown broadcast like grass seed in early May and it would be well over a year before linen cloth could be made as the plant would go through at least several dozen processes before this goal could be reached.

Their farm tools were crude — the wooden plow with heavy moldboard, some tipped with iron point; harrow made from crotch of tree with wooden teeth unless they could afford to have the blacksmith hammer in metal ones; thin-bladed sickles to cut the grains, and scythes for grass and oats; wooden combs with wire teeth for carding wool before it could be spun into yarn on a large wheel, and similar implements to process the flax into thread on the small wheel. By the time they had worked from sunup to dark with the heavy cumbersome tools they were more interested in food and rest than improving their minds with books read by candlelight or flickering flame from the fireplace.

Their garden crops included potatoes, beets, peas, carrots, beans, squash, pumpkin, cucumbers, garden "sass", and gourds, the latter used for dippers, cups and bowls for daily use in the larger families. Later leather or horn would be fashioned into tableware along with wooden plates and mugs from white birch or poplar during the long winter months. Very little pewter, crockery or china was brought in with the first settlers whose pack loads were limited to more essential goods like farm tools, cooking utensils, bedding, seeds, food, clothing and a few articles of furniture.

Cattle, worth $8.00 to $14.00 per head, did not begin to produce as richly as they would in another hundred years when fed on western grains that were shipped east and sold cheaper than the farmer could raise them. An annual yield of 125 pounds per cow was considered good and dairy products, butter and cheese, could always be traded for labor from the blacksmith, carpenter, cobbler, or exchanged for goods at the store.

Shoulder yokes, or a pole across the shoulders to suspend heavy loads were used by the farmer to tote seed or produce if he did not own a horse or ox. When he visited the grist mill he carried the sack of grain across his shoulders. Oxen were used entirely for farm and road work and were usually shod by forcing them to the ground and tying their legs together before fitting them with shoes. The ox sling to lighten this chore was not introduced until after 1800. Horses were used solely for riding until the carriage and farm wagon were introduced a few years later. The oxcart and sledge were the only vehicles found on the farm, the latter used in both summer and winter for hauling.

It would be a number of years before the farmer would reach his idea of heaven on earth with fifty acres of meadow land and a pew in the church, and even longer before he realized this richest of soil needed feeding when hungry, rest before it grew weary and weeding before it became rank. Crops and fruit trees grew so fast and produced so abundantly during these early years that he gave no thought to the future when both would fail him.

Families were large and chores were shared by all, including the five-year old who was expected to assist in the lighter tasks. If help was hired, and few could afford it, the price for clearing an acre of land would average about five dollars. Surplus potatoes could be sold to the distillery for ten to twenty cents per bushel or credited toward potato whiskey at fifty cents or less per gallon. Apples too could be sold for cider brandy, or cider at twenty-five cents per barrel. If his pair of oxen and the services of two men were furnished to make and repair roads, $1.00 per day was credited toward his taxes. His corn was worth half a dollar per bushel, oats twenty-five cents, and soap five dollars per barrel. His time was worth twenty-five cents a day for helping his neighbor hay, or eight dollars per month if one of the older sons hired out for farmwork to earn the price of 100 acres of land within a few years. Wood was figured at one dollar per cord delivered in exchange for carpenter work at the same price per day if tools were brought along with the craftsman.

The farmer paid up to four dollars for a pair of boots for work, and as much as five for dress boots, but he made them last a long time by waterproofing them with a warm solution of linseed oil and turpentine, painting the leather until it could absorb no more. The pine or spruce oil and flaxseed supplied his ingredients. His boots or shoes lasted longer than today as it was common practice to have them made to fit either foot so they could be alternated. As the entire family went barefooted most of the time, except in the coldest weather, boots lasted a long time, being passed on to a younger member if outgrown.

The meals were simple, usually coarse bread and mush at dawn, cold meat or fish later in the day, and the same unvaried diet if one were still hungry before retiring. Cattle were never killed for beef until the herds increased, and few families had pigs or poultry the first few years. Their stock comprised cows, oxen, sheep, and horses if they were fortunate enough to own any or all of these when they arrived, otherwise they planned to buy or trade for them as they prospered. It would be sometime before regular butchering became the practice on the farm in late November and hams hung in the loft or smokehouse for safe keeping. No one had to go hungry but meals were monotonous and irregular. The habit of three meals daily, breakfast, dinner and supper, was practically unknown among English-speaking people until the late 1700's. A kettle of mush or stew made from venison, fish or wild game usually hung on the crane in readiness for those who labored in the fields.

By 1815 the winnowing mill and bent scythe snath came into use, the iron plow about 1820, and twenty-five years later the horse rake, followed by the cultivator and crude mowing machine with wheel and cutter, the bar extending at right angle so it could not be lowered or raised when in motion.

Work horses shipped in from the west gradually replaced the ox-team which was valued at fifty dollars per yoke by the early settler. Western corn and grain reduced the crops of the local farmer but increased his dairy herd which could be fed more cheaply, and scientifically improved by following the advice of agricultural groups set up for his benefit. With the increase in milk production the hand separator appeared on the farm about 1890, followed immediately by the building of creameries which were co-operatively owned by the farmers. For years they were the only satisfactory method for him to market his milk. Creameries were established at Goose Green and East Corinth in the early 1890's. Goose Green was famous for its butter which was in great demand until the creamery was destroyed by fire on April 21, 1938. A jar of thick cream could be bought for a quarter, so heavy that it did not need to be whipped for topping on pie or shortcake; as late as the 1930's this luxury was known in East Corinth. The second creamery built in the village in 1907, the former Burgess Carriage Shop, was purchased by Whiting Milk Company over twenty years ago and is used for a delivery station only at the present time.

When the large dairy companies of New England no longer would accept milk in cans and required the producers to install bulk tanks, some of them on farms inaccessible to tank trucks for part of the year, a group of local farmers here and in nearby towns rebelled. They purchased a vacant creamery in Bradford and became affiliated with the Eastern Milk Producers Co-operative Association of Syracuse, New York, in July, 1963. Their business is rapidly expanding with farmers in towns some distance away shipping their milk to the Bradford Creamery.

The famous maple products of Corinth have been touched upon in other chapters but syrup and sugar continue to be a large cash crop for the farmer. A few are using the new method of running pipe lines of thin plastic hose from the tapped trees to the sugar house while others prefer hanging buckets for this purpose. There are advantages in both methods. Government regulations for the production of these products are growing more burdensome each year, increasing the expenses of the farmer to meet the sterile conditions demanded. Statistics for 1964 show there are 15 producers in town, 17,747 trees tapped and 3850 gallons of syrup made, some of which went into cream sugar and cakes.

Over the years the number of farms in Corinth have dwindled. Statistics for the years 1840 and 1850 are given here to compare with present conditions.

(*Taken from town records, not Thompson's Gazatteers which give no figures.) It would seem that with very few exceptions the statistics were merely copied from one decade to another, and the population of 1850 grossly exaggerated.

Thompson's statistics of 1824 contain no agricultural records, merely listing one attorney, three physicians, three merchants (correctly 7), ten blacksmiths, one tavern, three distilleries, four tanneries, three carding machines, five clothier's works, six grist mills, eight saw mills, sixteen school districts, population 1307. Here again he erred as there were at least four taverns operating in town at that time. Just three years earlier on September 4 the listers of Corinth met at the Court House in Chelsea to examine, average and equalize the real estate in town but our statistician did not use their figures. (Improved) lands were set at 8824 acres with an appraisal of $7.50 per acre and house lots, including all mills, stores, etc., were valued at $71,668.00.

By 1860 the farmer decided manure was better used as top dressing for soil in preference to his former method of plowing it in. Phosphates were fine but the cost of transportation was much too high. He was finally convinced that early cutting of grass resulted in better hay than waiting until it ripened. His wife was making print butter by 1870 and had a choice of a great variety of designs in hand-carved molds. Pressed hay was processed on several Taplin Hill farms in 1893 when a sugar bounty was paid under the administration of Grover Cleveland. The great drought of 1908-09 saw many local farmers reducing their herds by one-third, and more land becoming abandoned. Already pastures had grown up to groves of second-growth maple following desertion of many farms throughout town fifty or sixty years earlier.

Conditions were changing rapidly as coal came into more general use for fuel than wood, sheep raising was no longer profitable, and the farmer less able to hire farm or domestic help.

For generations every family in town participated in some form of farming if nothing more than keeping a cow, or a few chickens, a pig or two, perhaps a beef, for slaughter in late fall to supply meat for the table and lard for the housewife. A garden for summer and winter vegetables was found near every house. Vegetables are still raised by some families for the table and freezer but statistics for 1964 show the farms in Corinth are reduced to 44 (see end of chapter for list), with 1266 dairy cows, 236 heifers between 1 and 2 years, 173 under 1 year, 11,782 hens, 20 beef cattle, 35 sheep and 4 oxen. As late as 1903 a town team of 20 yoke of oxen were exhibited at the Waits River Valley Fair on the old muster grounds!

Long Before The Days of Baled Hay and Tractors

The farms are mechanized today, eliminating the need for hired help year around, but the farmer's costs are high and the price of his produce low. He reaps little benefit from government subsidies that have enriched so many of the western farmers. More and more of them are going out of business on the small farms that for years were the backbone of our economy. Endless regulations, the high price of grain, expensive equipment and registered stock make farming prohibitive for the young man who would like to follow in his forefather's footsteps but has no farm to inherit. Nor does he have the money to finance such an undertaking. It is to be hoped that better days are ahead for the Corinth farmer who can sympathize with a statement made seventy years ago by an equally discouraged Vermonter who mourned, "The farmer was the first man made and when he was put into the Garden of Eden he ate the best fruits and enjoyed life, but things have changed today. Now he is the last man that lives and if there is anything left from the milk check after all others are paid he can thankfully say 'All is well, it is better to give than receive.' "

None of the early industries of Corinth are in existence today but for years they added to the prosperity of the town until changing methods and competition forced them out of business. One of the successful manufacturers was Joel Barnes & Sons of Goose Green who produced linen shoe thread eagerly sought by shoemakers locally and outside the state. Cordage was added to their products during the years when both flax and hemp were raised by many farmers here and in nearby towns. The business was originally started by William Chalmers who left Scotland in 1834 to settle in Newbury. He and Dr. Hinckley opened the factory in Corinth in 1845 after the arrival of machinery imported from Scotland. Within a few years they sold out to Barnes, Chalmers returning to Newbury where he died in 1865. Nothing further is known of Dr. Hinkley after 1850. Under "Barnes & Sons" the industry boomed to considerable fame until fluctuating conditions made them decide to go out of business in 1880.

A hundred and more years ago there were two carriage shops in East Corinth, Page and Hale, and the Burgess Carriage Shop where famous buggies and sleighs were made, beautifully upholstered and handsomely painted with colorful stripes or designs for eye appeal. The craftsmen who worked in these shops were well known throughout this region for their talent and could demand a good price for their services — Sabin Divoll, Jasper Guild, Horace Miller, Dan Hale, the Sibleys, the Pages, Rufus Rowland and others. One of them was very musical, Sabin Divoll, and played the flute which he learned unaided in boyhood. He also became proficient on the violin, cornet, bass viol and banjo, playing as a lad in the old Topsham band. When Hamilton formed his orchestra in East Corinth, Sabin was a star performer, along with Guild and Dayton who furnished music all around the countryside for years.

Before the town was ever organized the first sawmill was built, to be followed by similar industries along every stream of any size that could be dammed for water power, until they totaled a baker's dozen in operation at one time or another. For generations lumbering was a big business in Corinth, providing work for loggers and farmers who were not adverse to earning extra money during the winter months when their year's supply of fuel had been cut in the woodlot. Logging is still done to some extent and hauled to mills outside of town since the Salomaa Brothers closed their mill at the triangle formed by the Taplin Hill-Rabbit Track-Center Roads two years ago. The importation of western lumber in recent years has made deep inroads in an industry that was foremost in the prosperity of the town.

In 1824 a report erroneously stated that there was nothing peculiar in the mineralogy of Corinth although small but handsome specimens of feldspar, garnet, serpentine, horneblende, mica and rock crystals have been found; the rocks are principally granite and mica slate. The reporter did not know that copper was locked in rockbound vaults in the north part of town, and no deposits of granite would ever be found here. Too many have been credited with the discovery of copper, the pioneer hunter and his dog, the roving Indian who used "pure copper" for barter, and numerous native sons, among them Edwin Carpenter who was said to be the first to find copper in northern Corinth. Ira Towle was named as discoverer in the Geology of Vermont published in 1861, and another reference gives the honor to Lyman M. Thayer.

Thayer, a local realtor and dealer in potash and oxen, was aware of copper deposits when he purchased 60 acres of land for $350.00 in 1849 from Sarah Pike, widow of Daniel who had recently died. In 1853 he sold this land for $1,000.00 to Silas Goddard of Worcester, Massachusetts, referring back to a deed of April 8, 1828 when Pike increased his holdings by purchase of 50 of these acres for $268.00. From now on lands on Pike Hill would soar to great values for that time, from $1,500 for 100 acres of woodland, to $20.00 to each of a dozen farmers for allowing tests to be made on their land. Some of these farmers were Ford, Towle, Luther, Smith, Sanborn, Bond, Banks, and Woodcock. Goddard, James Smith and Joseph Bicknell, the latter two of New York City, formed the Corinth Copper Company by an act of legislature on November 7, 1855, the land being designated as the "Pike Hill." Evidently surface operations were started under Charles Barber of New York who leased the property and found considerable ore but no financial backing. The owners tried working the surface and after two years decided it was unprofitable although they were certain copper lodes of great value lay beneath the stone in which they were encased.

Business was revived during the Civil War. From August, 1863 to 1866 over 100 men and boys were employed and $50,000.00 worth of ore produced from the mine which now had adits leading to the shafts. The property went through bankrupcy in 1874 and was purchased by a syndicate of three men, one of them, attorney Robert McK. Ormsby, a native son who was practicing in New York City, and the name was changed to the Eureka Copper Company. They allowed the mine to remain idle for years, and long after their deaths the property was still inactive.

In the meantime a second company was chartered by the legislature in 1863 under the name of the Union Mining Company, their entrance just a few rods from the former Corinth Copper Company. The price of copper fell steadily after the Civil War and this company too filed bankrupcy in 1877. The assignee, a Corinth lawyer and superintendent of local schools, Caleb C. Sargent, sold the property to Smith Ely, president of Vermont Copper Mining Company of Copperfield or Ely, whose workmen renamed it the Goddard Mine in honor of Mr. Ely's grandson, E. Ely-Goddard. Great activity started at the mine and heavy loads of ore were transported from Corinth to the furnace at Ely about 25 miles southeast of here. The copper mines at Ely and Corinth were the only ones in the United States running in 1879, with the exception of those at Lake Superior. On December 27 of that year Mr. Ely and associates petitioned the Orange County Court for a connecting highway between the Goddard Mine at Pike Hill and Cookeville, a distance of 3⅓ miles, which the Town of Corinth refused to build. The court decided in Ely's favor, ordering the road opened no later than January 1, 1881. The mine caused more than one headache for the town when a petition was granted on July 5, 1879 to appoint 19 special constables at Pike Hill for the public good and safety. This expense was more than offset by the prosperity brought in by the miners and their families who totaled over 1,000.

The new highway was ready before the deadline set by the court and innumerable loads of ore were drawn by 2, 4, or 6-horse teams to the railroad at Bradford 13 miles away for shipment to Ely. A total of 225 horses were kept on the roads most of the time at both Ely and Corinth, and the monthly payroll for the two mines amounted to $20,000.00. The Goddard Mine was always considered very valuable and it was said that from the very first its product more than paid expenses. The grade of copper was high but it grew increasingly expensive to mine, the price of copper falling to a low of 16¢ per pound.

In May and June of 1882 all the property of the Vermont Copper Mining Company at Ely, and the Goddard Mine of Corinth were sold by Mr. Ely to his grandson, Col. Goddard. He formed a new corporation with Francis Cazin of New York City, calling it the Vermont Copper Company, reserving, however, the Corinth property. This company went into the hands of a receivership in 1883 and was sold at public auction in 1888 to Francis Cazin who transferred it to the Copperfield Mining and Smelting Company. Corinth went through a severe local depression when the mine closed, and the townspeople were bitter about the road they were forced to build which had so little travel thereafter that it reverted to a track before many years. Many of the older and substantial farmers died, leaving their estates to be divided among heirs in distant states, the farms selling for what they could bring. The miners and their families moved away, leaving this area of town in the doldrums until Charles L. Speare, a local man, purchased the property, renaming it the Pike Hill Mines.

In 1905 he constructed a set of buildings costing $200,000.00, the mill itself 250 feet long and 64 feet high at its tallest point, excepting the ventilator. Office buildings were located nearby. Once again there was much activity on the hill with the boarding house and cottages filled with miners and their families, the school overflowing with children, and the store doing big business. The two mines were running continuously, night and day. Knox and Allen, a mining firm of Boston, Massachusetts and their engineer, Harry G. Hunter, were in charge of operations but the boom lasted but two short years when the mines closed. In 1910 E. L. Smith gained control of the property. The marked rise in the price of copper during World War I saw business resume on Pike Hill in 1915. Boston capitalists again backed the venture and kept the mines operating until 1919, with Harry Hunter returned to his former supervisory position. The mines closed for the last time, eventually passing into the possession of the Appalachian Sulphide Corporation who made several exploratory surveys during World War II when the much larger copper mines at South Strafford were run continuously for a fifteen-year period before the mining equipment was moved elsewhere. Nothing was done to re-open the Pike Hill Mines because of the great expense of mining the copper which admittedly was of very high grade. Some of the old mining houses had been moved, but all other buildings, barns, boarding house and mill collapsed from neglect until a fire in 1960 destroyed the last trace of the most extensive industry in the history of Corinth.

In 1863 Joseph K. Darling, lately discharged from service in the Civil War because of illness, discovered a vein of copper south of Cookeville in back of Hurricane Ridge and bought farmland which he sold at a good profit to a Boston group of investors who proceeded to buy up other available land in the area. It was called the "Old Mining Farm" and many test holes were made which can be seen today on property now owned by Elwin Hastings. The whole venture was a failure, the only one to make any money being Darling who always felt he never received as much as he thought he should. A total of $20,000.00 was invested and the Bostonians were glad to sell out in less than ten years for $2,000.00. Miners did live in the area for a few years as an elderly lady, who is a descendant of the Dearborns who settled on Dearborn Hill, tells that when her mother was a little girl she remembered her father locking up his barns and outbuildings to bar them from incessant raids by the "thieving miners" who lived on the adjoining mining property. He thought they were a worthless lot and was happy when they packed up and left.

Modern business establishments are limited to two stores, one in East Corinth owned by Alfred McLam, and the other in South Corinth by Earl and Irene Eastman; two garages, both in East Corinth, Berry's Texaco Station at the south entrance to the village and Pierson's Service Station on the Barre Road. A new building is in the process of construction to replace the one destroyed by fire this winter for the body-welding and car repair business of Kenneth Thompson. It is located opposite the Texaco Station. Nearer the village is Louise's Beauty Shop owned and operated by Mrs. Neal Young. The Brookside Cider Mill is to the south. This is a seasonal business conducted by Lee Tillotson.

The W. B. Martin Construction Company beyond the Texaco Station toward Barre sends its heavy road equipment throughout the state to build bridges, roads and other types of work where their machinery is needed. A gravel pit is also operated by the company whose owner, Willard Martin, is road commissioner of Corinth. About a dozen men are employed.

The Williams Poultry Farm high on MacArthur Hill on the west side of East Corinth is a four-story building equipped with every modern convenience to comfort and encourage the twelve to fifteen thousand chickens that produce eggs for hundreds of crates shipped each week within and outside the State. The "hen" business has seen many depressed periods in recent years, with low-priced eggs and high-priced grains from the west a constant threat to Vermont producers. The owner, C. John Williams, is an expert poultryman who keeps pace with the Boston market, selling or renewing his large flocks of chickens periodically as conditions warrant.

An antique shop "The Old Woodshed" was opened in the summer of 1963 by Mrs. John (Margaret) Pierson, Jr. in the north end of her house on the Topsham line in East Corinth. It is a seasonal business, closed in winter, but sales have been brisk and her shop has provided a clearing house for treasures and trash found in attics of many homes in the area.

The post office is to be located in the center of the village, opposite the residence of the postmaster, Paul Williams. It will be a modern building used for postal service only. The residence of George Hastings at Cookeville has a room set aside where post office boxes are used for the distribution of local mail in the area.

There are only two industries in town, the largest the Bowen-Hunter Bobbin Company which had its beginning in a small shop founded in 1905 by Ernest M. Bowen who supplied rough stock for the Jackman Brothers. On June 16, 1921 the Bowen Shop and East Corinth schoolhouse were completely destroyed by fire which for a time threatened to wipe out the village until brought under control by the bucket brigade and nearby fire departments. A partnership was then formed by Mr. Bowen and the late Winthrop T. Jackman who built a finishing plant for the manufacture of bobbins for the cotton trade. Both men were gifted mechanics and over the years designed numerous machines geared to the needs of their respective companies. In 1922 Mr. Jackman disposed of his interest to the former engineer at the Pike Hill Mines, Harry Hunter, who welcomed the opportunity to return to Corinth in the capacity of manufacturer and permanent resident. Under his dynamic drive the new company of Bowen and Hunter soon became one of the foremost producers of textile bobbins for cotton mills. In 1933 their sons-in-law, Lloyd E. Sweet and Bert T. Holland, Jr. joined the firm. The company specializes in card room bobbins which are recognized today as superior products in cotton mills of the United States, South and Central America. Further expansion was made in 1936 to include the manufacture of spinning and weaving bobbins. At the peak of production as many as 90 men and women from Corinth and nearby towns are employed at the local plant. They also have a roughing mill in

The Two Bobbin Companies — Bowen Hunter, lower — Jackman, upper

Warren where a dozen employees supply stock for the East Corinth Mill.

The Jackman Company, Inc. established at Topsham Four Corners in 1870 by Henry Abel Jackman, located on its present site, originally the old Taplin sawmill, in 1894 after a disastrous fire which wiped out the mill, boarding house, store, and private dwelling of the family. Their mill in East Corinth was destroyed by fire in 1898 and replaced by the present building. The business was carried on by his sons, Alfred, Winthrop and Henry who were pioneers in the development of automatic loom bobbins for the woolen industry. For years their business was confined solely to supplying bobbins for the many mills of the old American Woolen Company but this policy was changed in 1933 when the present owners, Lawrence M. Jackman and Kenneth C. Butler, purchased the property. Another member of the firm is Nathan J. Butler, son of Kenneth. On a smaller scale it too has played an important part in the industrial and economic life of the town.

While they cannot be classified as manufacturers mention should be made of the several cattle dealers in town, the largest operator being Peter Gallerani of Bradford who maintains a farm on the Barre Road where cattle are temporarily stabled until delivered to the auction run every Thursday evening at his commission sales building just over the Bradford line.

The Page Box Shop occupies one of the oldest buildings in East Corinth Village, part of which was a blacksmith shop occupied by William Page, son of Reuben and great grandfather of the present owner, Maurice Page. William's son, Charles, extended the shop in 1849 and again in 1874 which served as headquarters for farm tool repairs, with mowing machines a specialty. He was very ingenuous and could repair the most delicate watch, or pair of skates brought in by woe-begone child who knew that "Uncle Charles" was never too busy to attend his needs. Farmers might wait, but never the child. All types of farm equipment were repaired and sold here, horse rakes, cultivators and harrows.

The first creamery ever established in town was located in the south end of this building in 1893, a year before Charles, Jr., father of Maurice, entered the business where father and son manufactured wooden containers of every description, butter boxes, tubs of many sizes, 4 to 6-foot troughs, cow stanchions, maple sugar boxes and cheese boxes. The present owner followed in the footsteps of three generations by joining the company in 1930, adding egg crates and cartons for soft drinks to the production line. Since the death of his father in 1952 he has carried on alone.

The need for many of the boxes of yesterday no longer exists but tubs, troughs, and specialty items are still manufactured here from pine, basswood, ash or poplar. Appropriate to the equipment of this old-time box shop is a wood-burning BOX stove which is used for heat.

Houses and A General Store

THE HOUSES in town that have mellowed with age, withstanding the storms of nearer two centuries than one, greatly exceed in numbers the few that have dotted the landscape for fifty years or less. What is truly regrettable, the houses that have been destroyed by fire or abandonment since the beginning of town history outnumber by far those in existence today. It would be impossible to find traces of many of them along roads that were thrown up by surveyors of highway during the first hundred years. Cellar holes are concealed by vegetation in the places that once were substantial neighborhoods of farms within comfortable distances of each other. Foundation stones were long ago removed from others and the site leveled off to obliterate forever any surface proof of former habitations. The old houses remaining quietly hug the earth, their foundations rooted in soil as if to avoid attention from the forces that could destroy them.

Few of our old houses are built of brick and the hazards they have escaped — destruction from home fires, bolts of lightning, or freak wind storms — cause wonderment that so many have survived when their only protection was the family or neighborhood bucket brigade until more recent years. They were familiar landmarks when the lightning rod became available to partially ease the worries of property owners.

With the formation of the East Corinth Volunteer Firemen's Association in 1940 the residents have breathed more freely when fire threatens home or woodlands. Their first equipment was purchased from funds accumulated during the 1930's when Labor Day celebrations drew large crowds from surrounding towns, and has been continually improved upon since that time. Previous to this the services of nearby fire departments were requested in times of emergency. In the spring of 1964 members of the Association, led by their Chief, John Pierson, Jr., built with their own labors a fire house of cement blocks in the hillside south of the Congregational parsonage for the storage of truck and other essential gear used in rural conflagrations.

East Corinth Fire House

The difficulty of tracing old deeds to pinpoint the age of a dwelling, or the exact location of the first cabins, has already been explained as few of the deeds contain detailed information of property involved. Stakes and stones, stumps of the leverwood or hemlock trees, or land bordering the lot once pitched by Joseph Sanborn are meaningless today. The first reference to color was given in a deed dated July 29, 1854 when Josiah Scribner and John Wiggins sold a small red house with outbuildings on three-quarters of an acre of land to Jesse Eastman for $300.00. Some places changed hands so frequently down through the years, particulary in the area of East Corinth with lots divided into small plots by successive generations, that it was impossible to place with absolute accuracy the exact year a house was built. To add to the confusion there were many more small buildings on village house lots than are seen today, shops of various trades, stores, taverns, outbuildings, stables, barns, mills on both sides of the river, all encompassing the land stretching from the Topsham line to "Keenan" Bridge at the south end of Page's Box Shop. On the site of the present bobbin mills, where both the Hedgehog and Tabor Branch were dammed for water power, at one time or another there were several blacksmith shops, starch factory, tin shop, distillery, carriage shop and small dwellings, with a potashery located on part of the library lot.

Some of the present houses are enlargements of small cottages that were wholly or partially retained in the evolution of the modern comfortable homes of today. Their age is revealed by split lath, ancient plastering, wide boards covered with hardwood flooring in many rooms, concealed paneling or wainscotting, and old mantels that are ornamental only where left in place to denote former fireplaces that were closed up and chimneys removed years ago.

In the early 1800's when the iron stove came into general use for cooking and heating, our forefathers were so pleased with this convenience that they soon thereafter closed up draughty fireplaces that were more healthful than realized. The number of deaths from "galloping consumption" and lung fever increased ten-fold when airtight stuffy rooms became universal in the homes of generations following the pioneers. Shutters were placed on houses to be used, not for decoration, to close out the winds and cold of long winter months. Fresh air was feared as much as plagues and disasters by all but a few who were considered notional by their neighbors. The graveyards in town contain many epitaphs extolling the virtues of young men and women who needlessly died through ignorance of contagious lung infections that wiped out three and four members of a family within a few years. Lack of fresh air and close association with the infected exacted a dreadful toll from the adolescent population.

George Hasting's House — Cookeville

Eugene Eastman Farm

The list of old houses is long but notable. Among them are the Wayland Jordan farmhouse of brick and that of Alden Slack of wood in South Corinth both built before 1800; the George Hastings' brick house at Cookeville, also the Cooke mansion nearby; the Robert Osgood Cape-Cod-style house at the Corner, a design found all over town which shows the architectural taste of settlers from the seacoast; the Alton Davis place at West Corinth, the Eugene Eastman House on the Barre Road and the Henry Metcalf colonial in the village. These are but a few of the dwellings that have seen generations of families living within their walls.

On Pike Hill in 1792 settled Joseph Miles and a year later Daniel Brown who lived within a mile of each other and whose families eventually intermarried. A descendant of both pioneers, the late Byrd Brown Miles, in her genealogy of the Miles family, described the evolution of the log cabin of Joseph Miles to a comfortable farmhouse over three distinct periods. The logs for the cabin, house No. 1, were hewn by hand to fit snugly, then laid in a square or triangle to lap at the corners. The logs were welded together by a composition of sand, water and blue clay found in parts of Corinth, making the shelter tight from winds and storms. Stones for the fireplace, readily found on the land, were similarly laid. Within a few years logs were drawn by oxen in the winter to the up-and-down sawmill to be shaped into wide boards for the second house, sometimes but an addition to the cabin, the latter sheathed in as part of the dwelling. This method was preferred by Jock Corliss who lived on the road to Page Hill and kept adding rooms as his family increased or married. Logs, a few feet square, were fashioned with hand tools to straight lengths for sills, under and overlays, rafters and side timbers, with clapboards and shingles also rived by hand. Lumber was pegged together with wooden pins and held firmly by wedges. Door hinges, latches and fixtures, all of wood, were made by hand. Each piece was fitted and marked beforehand for the framework to join in perfect union. Only after this preliminary work was completed did all the neighbors from miles around rally for the "house raising" which took from one to two days before it was roofed over. In many ways it was a holiday or neighborhood get-together where wives pooled food to feed the workers, everyone enjoying the respite from daily routine. Number three house, often an adjunct to the cabin and first addition, or entirely of new construction on a more favorable spot than the earlier homestead, was also built of boards but square-headed nails, metal hinges and latches were now used in place of wood.

The finished home might have a center door with hallway leading toward the rear, or like a true Cape Cod, merely an entrance hallway with stairs leading upward and rooms to each side for front parlor and bedroom. To the rear was the large family room designated as the winter kitchen with bedrooms on each end. Some of these old-time kitchens had as many as eight or ten doors leading to the cellar, pantry, summer kitchen, bedrooms, woodshed, yard or to the loft overhead which was oftentimes left unfinished until a later day. The large brick fireplace with Dutch ovens might be found in either kitchen but more likely the summer one which was replaced by the family room. Connected to the rambling house were sheds, wagon, horse and cattle barns for the convenience of the owner when snowdrifts piled high. These could be a tremendous fire hazard and were later separated from the main house by many farmers to safeguard their homes, as was done on the old farm of Major John Taplin some years ago.

This house is one of the oldest and most interesting in town, containing many of the original features of an early day such as hand-wrought iron hinges, latches, iron nails, wooden pegs and corner posts in all the rooms. All doors are designed with the single or double cross to ward off witches, small window frames of different sizes from which most of the original glass has disappeared, wainscotting, and most unique of all, the lovely paneling along the staircase in the lower hall. In no other house in town are there solid shutters in upper and lower sashes that are concealed within the walls and pull out from the side to cover the window glass in back of them. They vary by a few inches in length as the upper sash is longer than the lower. Known as Indian shutters, they were to protect the house from enemy attack. (The only other house containing inside shutters is the Cooke Mansion where they are of unusual heighth and are used to divide the ballroom on the second floor into two large chambers. They fold back against the wall like a sectional screen when not in use as a room divider.) The brick wall of the nine-foot fireplace with Dutch ovens is retained in the kitchen, also the long rods suspended by large hand-wrought iron hooks fastened to the ceiling. From this strings of apples, herbs, seed corn and other produce were hung for long slow drying and protection from four-legged creatures. The original plaster, much of it over earlier paneling, remains on the walls and ceilings of rooms, the latter of varying heighths as rooms were added over the years.

The house is built with center hall, the front rooms on either side heated with double fireplaces which opened into rooms to the rear. Many of the original clapboards on the outside have never been replaced, nor the deep molding along the edge of the roof. The foundation is somewhat mysterious as the present owner, Harry Brainerd, has never been able to locate any ledge on his 420 acres, or in the vicinity of Taplin Hill, that could have supplied the twelve-foot gray stone block which supports the front half of the house. Chisel marks are plainly seen on the foundation blocks which are about 15 inches in depth and width.

The long shed leading from house to barn across the driveway has a row of windows looking out on surrounding hills and the White Mountains to the east. Wide thirty-inch boards are found here, some of them marked with Roman numerals, as are similar boards in the barn which has hand-hewn timbers tied together by wooden pegs. To the north about a mile away can be seen the former homes of Col. John Taplin and his sons, William (Leo and Grace Hutchinson, descendants of the Colonel,) and Nathan (also owned by descendants Karl and Wesley Carter.) One can imagine how clearly a blast from the ram's horn would resound across the fields to rally the eight sons of the Colonel in times of need.

The land on which old houses are located is of historic value to the town. To name but a few places, the acres of Capt. Nehemiah Lovewell where the James Hood and Bryce Metcalf farms are located; the Stevens Tavern, owned by Frank Emerson, that formerly included the old muster grounds; the Elwin Hastings farm on land cleared by Ezekiel Colby, also the "Mining Farm" on the east side of Hurricane Ridge; and the Dan Russell House on two acres of land in South Corinth. This house is of interest as exact costs were kept by Roswell Crook, a prosperous but tight-fisted farmer, when he and his brother built it in 1839 on part of their large acreage to replace the rough homestead occupied by their ancestors before the town was organized. The cost to a penny was recorded, totaling $750.23 for a Cape Cod house with six rooms downstairs, four up, and woodshed. The breakdown in figures which are lumped together for brevity is unbelievable today.

Roswell and his brother were "old bachs" and noted for their parsimony, sitting on either side of a candle, when the mail was late, to read and compare financial reports in the city newspapers to which they subscribed, extinguishing the flickering light immediately thereafter. A hospitable housekeeper finally made a dent in their frugality and introduced a more cheerful atmosphere. She it was who discovered the loose piece of wood in the baseboard of the upper hall while cleaning and pried until it fell away, revealing a recessed hide-away where a pan of silver coins was cached. She triumphantly brought it downstairs, asking if she could keep all the money she found, knowing full well the brothers would as soon part with their left arms.

The oldest store in Vermont in continuous service since its doors opened to the public in the fall of 1808 is that of Alfred McLam in East Corinth. It was built along with house and barn by Gen. Micah Barron and son-in-law David Hartwell, traders of Bradford, when they purchased half an acre on August 20, also 37 square rods with pearlash thereon from Goulds-burn Taplin for $50.00. The larger lot began one rod below the bridge leading across the (Tabor) Branch in the center of the village, with a few scattered small buildings, description unknown, included in the deal. A colonial house was immediately built with attached barn, just north of the store which they located at the edge of the road. The premises were occupied by Barron's son, William, who lost heart after the death of his young wife in 1816, leaving him with two motherless children. The following year the entire property with additional acres was sold to Nathan D. Blake of Chelsea who moved here with his family and became the wealthiest man in this part of town before his death in 1849. He was named postmaster in 1830 and transactions are taken from his store and postal accounts that reveal conditions as they were in an earlier time.

Following Blake's death in 1849 his son, Nathan, Jr., became owner for 15 years until he sold out in 1864 to Loami Hale and Joseph K. Darling, the latter occupying the house. Goods advertised by them in December in the Aurora of the Valley suggested patrons come to the old Blake stand where they would find the latest merchandise from Boston. Listed were delaines, alpacas, lyoneses, French merinos, German poplins, Thibets, Moscow beavers, ladies' and gents' furs and fur-trimmed hoods, fancy cassimeres for pants or suits, also fine ready-made suits and coats for men and boys. There were boots and shoes for men, boys, ladies and children, also codfish, mackerel, tripe, citron, glass and tinware, half a dozen assortments of tea, not to mention groceries of every description, some terms unfamiliar today.

Hale went on to more interesting pursuits locally, retaining his interest in the store but leaving the management to Darling who sold out in 1871 to study law at Bradford. The Blake House was bought by Robert Fulton of Newbury who opened a store and postoffice in the southeast front room and added bay windows to the front of the colonial residence when his wife tired of the prim but lovely lines. George Way, ex-tavern keeper at the present Lawrence Jackman house, operated the store for a few years until James B. Kemp succeeded him as proprietor until his death in 1892. George and Holland decided after two years that they were not interested in the general store business and were followed by Frank Merrill who in turn sold to Fred Miller of Newport Center in 1898.

On March 5, 1914 Miller sold to Lester L. Worthley who installed a gasoline tank to supply fuel for automobiles that were growing in popularity on the sandy roads of Corinth, also enabling him to operate the first chain-driven truck in town which he converted from an old Ford car. He received the appointment as postmaster, locating the office at the rear of the store. During his tenancy of 32 years he remodeled the interior several times before selling to his son, Earl, on January 1, 1947. At the same time he erected a small building on the east side of the village street at the foot of the driveway leading to his residence for the accommodation of the postoffice which for the first time in local history was housed in quarters designed solely for that purpose. He retired in January of 1959 and was succeeded by Paul Williams.

During the ownership of Earl Worthley the store affiliated with the IGA Chain and self-service carts were installed for the convenience of customers. August 1, 1950 he sold to Edward Gaborsky of Lunenberg who operated the business until March 11, 1953 when the present owner, Alfred McLam of East Topsham, became the proprietor, building a new one-story home opposite the schoolhouse in the summer of 1964.

Never since the store opened 156 years ago has it ever closed except on the Sabbath, a custom followed today. It remained a low one-story building with overhead loft for years until Kemp raised the roof and added 1½ stories for an upstairs apartment occupied by his family. No longer are horse-collars and harnesses, cotton wrappers, whale oil or bustles sold and from its present appearance there is little resemblance to the general store so familiar to past generations who met here to await the stagecoach carrying mail and passengers, and to swap yarns around the pot-bellied stove.

The "homespun and cowhide" patrons of the general stores throughout Corinth in its early years would have been amazed at the garments on sale when Hale and Darling started operating the old Blake store in 1864 as few, if any, of them ever heard of overcoats or underwear. Women wore shawls or cloaks for warmth, padded and quilted petticoats, a hand-woven cotton or flannel chemise which had no relationship to under garments of today, a boneless stay that laced in front like a corset, hand-knit woolen stockings held up by yarn garters, and calfskin shoes tied with leather thong. The dress might be made of flannel, challis or other soft woolen spun, woven and sewn by hand, a knit or fur hood, in summer possibly a silken one, woolen mittens, but no underclothing of any kind, overshoes or rubbers. She rode to church on a pillion behind her husband mounted on horseback or in a high-back sleigh or sledge, the latter drawn by the faithful ox, unless they lived near enough to walk over unplowed roads broken up by oxen for easier traveling.

Her husband was clad in shirt of coarse cotton or tow over which was worn a flannel garment if he was cold-blooded, woolen trousers, home-woven and handmade, held up by knitted gallusses, jacket or coat probably made from the same cloth as his wife's gown only fulled more with a different finish, home-knit socks, long-legged cowhide boots greased with tallow, a stiff stock sharp enough to cut his throat unless he kept his head raised, a wool or fur cap and mittens. The minister or professional man might own an overcoat or surtout but not the vast majority whose wives had probably never seen a dressy "pelisse." Their garments were made of pure woolens but actually they wore little clothing to protect them from bitter winter temperatures, yet they seemed healthy and hardy, this first generation of pioneers.

When they retired at night men and boys slept in their day shirts, women and girls in their chemises. The only warm bedrooms, meaning temperatures slightly above freezing, were the ones opening off from the winter kitchen where the great fireplace provided a minimum of heat from its banked embers for parents and oldsters. All others slept in the open loft or garret above in temperatures far colder than the cattle barn. They could hear and feel the winter wind whistle through the cracks, sweeping in snow to sprinkle their pallets. Their homespun blankets and pieced quilts were plentiful, keeping them snug as long as their heads were buried in the folds. The feather mattresses which were slowly acquired from flocks of geese or hens provided a warmth never realized from the thin straw pads that creaked like an ungreased wheel with every movement of the sleeper.

Garments and coverlets were home-raised, spun and woven from animal or plant fibers to finished cloth. Cattle and sheep supplied the hides for their footwear which would be processed in the nearby tannery, and made into boots and shoes by the itinerant cobbler who came once or twice a year as a welcome guest of the family until all were outfitted with new footgear. The dye pot was eternally on the hearth toward the back corner, evil smelling but closely covered to provide a warm seat for the smallest member. The dyes were made of chemicals provided in part by the chamber pots of family members and combined with barks, weeds, indigo, sumac and butternut to produce the desired tints.

Frocking of plain colors or white and blue checks or stripes, strong in texture and enduring as the hills, was used entirely to make the long smocks worn by men and boys over trousers. The wealthier class also wore this type of garment for daily garb. Linsey-woolsey and calico were used for work-a-day garments for women and children, and satinet produced with linen warp and wool filling, or pure linen cloth, supplied dressier clothes until their hearts' desire was reached with the purchase of silk for a gown. Before the wool could be spun into yarn or the flax into thread there were long months of hard labor. The sheep were driven in the spring to a deep pool in the river and washed, followed by the shearing a few days later, the sorting of fleeces, and carding of wool before spinning. A girl who was a good spinner could always earn extra money, as could the weaver who was proud of the colors and designs of her own creation.

Household chores were never easy, as the making of butter alone required numerous steps from the time the milk was set in pans for the cream to rise before skimming, to be followed by long agitation in the dasher-type churn. If it did not come quickly hot stones were sometimes dropped in to drive witches out of the churn and the housewife never knew that the heat caused the butter and whey, or buttermilk, to separate more easily. Surplus butter was packed in wooden tubs in the spring, becoming known as June butter, which brought a good price at the store.

Home medicines were made from roots and leaves found locally, catnip, sage, ginger-root, goldseal, thoroughwort, flaxseed, skunk cabbage, white oak bark, rhubarb root, red rose leaves, summer savory and slippery elm; extracts were made from gentian, dandelion and butternut, all being but a few of the natural products gathered by housewives in their spare time. Neighbors always came in to help out when sickness visited the family, bringing their own favorite remedies for trial, or helped to wash and lay out the corpse when death came.

Soft soap was made once a year from hard wood ashes, supplied by fireplace and stove. The ashes were poured into a large hollow log placed on end at a slight tilt. Through this trough water slowly dripped to form a strong brown lye. Animal fats, saved over a long period of time for "soap grease," were added to the lye and cooked in a huge iron cauldron over an open fire in the dooryard until of the right consistency. Skimmed and clarified the soft soap was stored in barrels to be used for washing and cleansing.

Pleasure was mixed with chores when huskings and apple parings were held in the fall, quiltings during the winter, and parties planned or spontaneous whenever young people got together. The genealogist, Byrd B. Miles, tells of a party at the home of her ancestor "Grandsir Miles" in the winter when a blizzard started in early evening, continuing without let-up for three nights and days. Wind drifted the snow in great windrows, keeping the delighted guests house-bound. The men shoveled snow when they could venture outside during the day, the girls cooked great quantities of food, and everyone danced and played the evenings away.

There was no fear of anyone going hungry as abundant stores of meats and vegetables, milk, cheese and butter were always found in the homes of prosperous farmers who did not depend on a grocery store for their supplies. The roads were finally broken out by teams of oxen, to the regret of the young people who had the distinction of attending the jolliest party in the annals of the town.

The Blake Memorial Library, East Corinth — 1902

PUBLIC LIBRARIES are usually built with community funds but the one in East Corinth started with a wheelbarrow full of books when several young men in 1893 wistfully dreamed of a local library in their home town. They also knew that they would have to do something about it themselves if their wishes were ever to come true. They started through the village with a wheelbarrow, collecting books from all who shared their aspirations and from others who were happy to rid themselves of musty old volumes stored in the attic. There is no record of the number or titles of books collected when they were delivered to the northeast room of the Way House, the present home of Lawrence Jackman in the center of East Corinth. Here the library opened from 6:30 to 8:00 p.m. on Saturday, December 8 with Charles C. Dickey, Ruthven Rowland and Charles Page taking turns as librarian.

Former residents became interested in the project, sending books and magazine subscriptions, the most generous donors being the daughter and two sons of the late Nathan and Susan Blake, who were now living in the vicinity of Boston. Others in town became enthusiastic and a series of home-talent plays, bazaars and dances were held for several years to raise funds. The young men advertised the dances as "Skim Milk" balls in derision of the "Whipped Cream" parties sponsored in the rival town of East Topsham four miles to the north.

When the Way property was sold the books wandered from one vacant room to another until they ended up in the basement of the Edson Rowland store in 1897. Charles Page whose father donated the lumber, Bert Holland and Charles Dickey volunteered their services as carpenters to fix up the quarters, installing and painting shelves, staining the floor and cutting a door in the north wall for an outside entrance. All concerned with the new library felt they had made excellent progress when donations continued to pour in to increase circulation of books, but were filled with dismay when the proprietor said "No, Siree!" to their request for a stove to heat the premises. No fires were going to be lit under his feet as long as he had any say in the matter.

There was no formal organization until the East Corinth Library Association was founded that year with Ruthven Rowland elected president as he was the prime promoter from the very beginning. Charter members included the names of pioneer families: Taplin, McArthur, Jewell, Page, Dickey, Rowland, Gilbert, Sawyer, Stearns, Divoll, Blood, Corliss, Jackman, Butterfield, Currier and Metcalf. Membership dues were set at fifty cents yearly. Four denominational magazines, Review of Reviews and the Youth's Companion graced the library table while along the walls were reference books, encyclopoedias, biographies, histories, travel, poetry and scientific works, totaling over 1,000 volumes. Light works of fiction were available but one high-brow remarked that it was to the credit of the readers that the majority of patrons turned to the classics.

The Association knew it could not continue long in heatless quarters and unanimously agreed that a permanent home was needed for the library, a desirable site their first consideration. Fate seemed to step in when fire destroyed the famous Old Brick Hotel, properly called the Saginaw House, on June 12, 1899. The Blake family heard of their success in buying the land a year later from Sylvester and Maria Thompson who had decided not to rebuild. The wealth of Almira, Nathan IV, and Charles Blake was shared with the Association when they took over the complete responsibility of building a memorial library in honor of their parents "who lie in the lovely old cemetery on the hill." A Boston architect was engaged to design and build with local labor a Victorian style of building from granite and cream-colored brick, located directly across the road from the old Blake Home.

Old-home days were encouraged by Vermont governors during this era and a two-day celebration of this type was chosen by the committee for the dedication on July 1 and 2, 1902. Church services, picnics, dinners and hours of reminiscences were the routine until the dedicatory service on the library lawn when distinguished speakers, famous singers and musicians from Boston and other cities, and native sons who had gained success in distant places, all joined in a dignified program. Their words of wisdom are lost in the mists of time but the tale handed down by people who were young and carefree then was about a minister who supplied the one moment of hysteria when his false teeth flew out from the grandstand in the middle of his eloquent discourse.

A short sketch of this public-spirited family reveals that William Blake left England for America in the ship Mary and John, landing and settling in Dorchester, Massachusetts in the year 1640. In the year 1700 one of his descendants settled in Wrentham, Massachusetts. In 1736 Nathan Blake 1st, of Wrentham, likewise a descendant, was granted land and bounty, settling in Keene, New Hampshire, his house being the first one in that town. He was active in building the fort in which all the inhabitants sought nightly refuge from hostile Indians. While feeding his cattle early one morning he was captured by Indians and taken to Canada where he was held prisoner for two years, enduring great indignity and cruelty. On one occasion he was forced to run the gauntlet, and saved his life another time by permitting the swiftest Indian to outstrip him in a race. Upon release by exchange of prisoners he returned to his family in Keene where he died August 4, 1811, aged 99 years, 7 months.

His grandson, Nathan Blake III, born at Keene on October 15, 1784, married Susan Torrey in Chelsea, Vermont on September 15, 1815. She was born in Cornish, New Hampshire on July 1, 1795, a member of the Torrey family whose names were famous in professional and educational work throughout New England. In 1817 they purchased the house, store, potashery, woodland and pastures belonging to Col. William Barron. The bride was delighted with her new house which for those days was considered quite pretentious.

The Blakes took a leading role in village affairs, becoming active in church work, philanthropic and social life, laboring always for the betterment and progress of the community. To them were born seven children, six of whom lived to maturity. Their eldest daughter, Susan Ann, died in 1841, age 20, of consumption as did the second daughter, Sophia Chandler, age 22, who died in 1845. Both are buried beside their parents in the old cemetery. In 1848 the third daughter, Mary Roxanna, married George Warren Heath and settled in Boston. Mr. Blake died unexpectedly on January 31, 1849 and the long-established mercantile business was transferred to his son, Nathan Day Blake, IV. Monetary depressions and other causes proved the business to be less remunerative than formerly, and the health of the youngest son, Charles Metcalf Blake, was also a cause for concern when the family holdings in the village were sold in 1864.

Nathan Blake, IV, married Matilda C. Thompson of East Topsham in October of 1852 and in December of the same year his sister, Almira Torrey Blake, became the bride of Isaac Fenno, a wealthy merchant of Boston who was an old friend of her father. In June, 1853, the mother and brother, Charles, moved to Boston to reside with her and Mr. Fenno. There the mother died September 18, 1884 at the age of 89 and was buried in the village cemetery beside her husband and two daughters. After disposing of his property Nathan, IV, moved with his family to Boston where he entered business and prospered far beyond any possibilities ever dreamed of in Vermont.

The blessed memories of their childhood days that meant so much to Almira and her two brothers are entwined with the history of the land upon which they built the Blake Memorial Library. It was originally a fractional part of Col. John Taplin's holdings in town and was sold about 1820 to John Chapman, harness maker, who was born May 13, 1792 on a farm in Newbury near the village of East Corinth. While yet a young man he started the construction of a house which he intended should be the finest in Orange County. It was modeled, it is said, after a mansion he had seen in Philadelphia and contained over 100,000 bricks, fired in the Taplin kilns. The large quantities of hewn stone for the foundation were drawn from the Catamount Quarry in Haverhill, New Hampshire. Upon this house he spent a lifetime of savings, in all over $15,000.00 which was a considerable fortune for his time, and when he became an elderly man the mansion was still unfinished, only one or two rooms being habitable. Each year's work of sewing leather he transformed into a structure which meant to him a life's devotion to an ideal.

To many of the village children their fairy tales and books of adventure were the marvelous stories he told them of life in far-off Philadelphia; the prospective but wholly imaginary arrival of an enchanting princess who was to become his lovely bride gave an added thrill to his tales. To the disappointment of several generations of children, the princess never materialized and John died unwed. Such wondrous orders were filled by him for fine pony harnesses, trimmed and decorated with red morocco and charming side saddles with white kid covering for which most accurate measurements had to be taken.

As John approached his 75th year his health began to fail but still we read about his hospitality in old diaries which relate that several oyster suppers, followed by dancing, were held in the Old Brick House at J. Chapman's. Other customs of John's time included daily teas at one home or another where ladies gathered to sew and gossip. Balls and levees were held several times during the year, preceded by a banquet at the old inn of Capt. George Stevens who lived on the edge of the muster grounds. The guests two-stepped and square-danced until four or five in the morning, the changes being called by a lady no less. The playing of baseball was also enjoyed but no names were given of participants who romped around bases in the 1860's and '70's; scores are unknown but it must have been a very popular game more than one hundred years ago when it is mentioned Saturday after Saturday during the summer and autumn, the teams meeting at Topsham Four Corners or on the muster grounds.

The diarist worked hard and loved life, keeping a spotless home for her husband and family. She often wrote of washing clothes, by hand of course, mopping seven floors, churning, and baking bread all in the same day, still being able to go out in the afternoon for tea, and to the north, south and mid-village stores. She collected rain water for her wash, bought ingredients to make washing compound, and rinsed her clothes in the Tabor Branch when there was a water shortage. She borrowed yeast from her neighbors to start a new batch, or lent it as needed, sat up all night with the sick, mended and sewed, referring to her husband's footings upon which she was knitting. She darned his Shaker night socks, commenced Chenille work for a rug, heard her neighbor jaw about politics, commented resignedly about her father peddling his pig around the village after she had dressed its innards, and looked with justifiable contempt upon that "female critter" who went hunting up past her house, living in sin with a disreputable neighbor. She bought herself a hoop skirt, also a bustle, sewed on a polonaisse, made a satinet dress with overskirt and waist, bought cloth and buttons for her husband's shirts and vest, also trimmed her daughter's waterproof cloak with braid. She rode in a covered carriage, a two-seater, a traverse sled, a fancily decorated sleigh, and a stagecoach.

Her husband made tin cutters for her pantry, and more than a barrel of soap which he stowed away in the cellar; bought alcohol, molasses and sugar to make beer, as did his neighbors, prospered as a carpenter and painter, mixing graining paint for furniture; spliced rope for the staging to erect the steeple of the old Union Meeting House, painted it and the blinds, and complained of the price of boards. Many a wooden casket he made, most of them to order, large and small, which his wife lined with a variety of materials and colors depending on the age, sex and social status of the departed. One funeral they missed entirely when they arrived for the scheduled afternoon service at a nearby farmhouse only to find that the prayer service and interment had been conducted at dawn because of the intensely hot weather — the art of embalming did not reach this area until thirty years later.

This good husband and father walked more often than rode to jobs at Newbury, Ryegate, Bradford and Topsham, returning home at night to do his chores. He exchanged work during haying, scythed his prairie land along the river bank, attended town meeting in September, also the Bradford Fair which was very hot, dusty and sinfully expensive, marvelled at an earthquake, helped his wife change ticking on a feather bed, set up stoves in winter, rolled down the snow about his buildings and road, and occasionally attended church and sociables with his wife and daughters. His excuse was that he had to be up by four in the morning but so did his uncomplaining wife who zipped through her work with the dash of a two-year-old colt, never napping during the day. He loved his family, toting his daughters to and from the homes of friends and relatives outside the village, surprised and greatly pleased his wife with the newest of clothes wringers, bought her a sewing machine which was the envy of other housewives, replaced the old melodeon with an organ, and was as hospitable as his wife in entertaining relatives and neighbors at dinners, teas, and holiday festivities.

Church was held once a month when the minister came down from Corinth Center to conduct services, morning, afternoon and evening with Sabbath School sandwiched in between. In the absence of the minister prayer meetings were held at the schoolhouse or in private homes on Sunday evenings. Dues for pewholders in the Union Meetinghouse were four dollars per year. payable in monthly installments if desired.

Christmas was not celebrated as bare mention is made of this holiday, the daughters possibly each receiving a gift and a practical one at that. The stores and business establishments were open as usual unless it happened to fall upon the Sabbath. Thanksgiving Day was the holiday sacred to Corinthians when families cooked for days to prepare a sumptuous repast. The following foods were prepared for Thanksgiving in 1870: apple jelly (bought in quantity at Batten's Cider Mill in Waits River for ten cents a pound, cheaper than the housewife could make it), a roast of beef and loin of pork, chickens stuffed and steamed, baked goose, cakes and cupcakes, fried cakes, jumbles, four vegetables boiled or baked, sauces, hard and soft cheese, pickles, steamed brown bread with raisins, raised flour bread, graham bread which was still a novelty, biscuits, apple, pumpkin, mince and cream pies. The day following a neighbor came in to supper, tasted a little of all the foods left over from the feast, and in the words of her hostess, "What she couldn't eat she took home with her in a basket."

A good neighbor sometimes helped her with household chores, receiving fifty cents for washing clothes by hand all day long, seventeen cents for a full day's ironing and a quarter for a day of hard cleaning. Eggs sold for one cent each, and a straw hat for her young schoolgirl daughter cost seventy-five cents. She went to Blake's Store with five dollars and bought herself material for a dress, buttoned boots, fish and oil, silver spoon for a gift, paid for a dishpan and teapot purchased earlier, and had change left in her purse. As the year closed she gave thanks for enough of everything on hand including money, for the pretty good health they all enjoyed, and expressed the desire to do right and to have those of her family do likewise. She gave thanks where they were due, remembering kindly old John, the harness-maker, who spent his last years with his brother, the unfinished mansion, now known as Chapman's Folly, selling for a fraction of its cost. It changed hands several times before Sylvester and Maria Thompson came into possession, completing the building and opening an inn called "The Saginaw House" in 1886.

Chapman's Folly, later known as The Saginaw House (site of Blake Library)

The library was completely destroyed by fire in November, 1945, only the walls standing as a tragic reminder of the great loss suffered by the town. The few hundred books in circulation were all that remained to start anew. Almira Blake Fenno Gendrot was a talented artist who studied abroad following the death of her husband, later marrying Felix Gendrot of Paris, France. She never forgot the memorial to her parents in East Corinth and hung several hundred of her paintings on the walls, none of which were saved. Rare family china and other valuable mementoes were displayed in the art room, along with sculpture from Italy, first editions and family records; all were consumed in the fire.

At the time of the dedication in 1902 Almira and her brothers set up an endowment for support of the library. Before her death in 1924 a free bed for the use of needy people in town was endowed in the Mary Fletcher Hospital at Burlington which is rarely occupied today, unused funds of substantial size accumulating each year. The present library was dedicated in November of 1949 and visited the following summer by Felix Gendrot who was so pleased to find a new library on the site that he added heavily to the endowment fund in his will. He died a few years later in France. Income from approximately $130,000.00 fully maintains all expenses of the library with a generous amount accumulating each year for improvements. In 1961 a stack room was added on the east side of the library and named the "Felix Gendrot Room" in appreciation of his generosity.

The grammar schools in town and three others in the Waits River Valley are supplied with books for classroom libraries throughout the year, special emphasis being placed on High School reading lists. Conveniently at hand is a section for books on career planning and college guidance. It is the sincere wish of the present Trustees, Maurice Page, who also serves as President, Kenneth Butler, Bert T. Holland, Jr., Lawrence Jackman, Clarence Cook, Fred Childs and Nathan J. Butler that this legacy from the Blake family for generations to come will continue to be "a model of efficiency for the development and good of a united people."

The first librarian was Sue Sawyer Butterfield until her death in March, 1939, when her daughter, Adelaide Butterfield Rowland, continued in this capacity until 1947, maintaining a library in her home following the disastrous fire. The old Blake House was sold that same year to John and Freda Williams and the temporary library moved across the road to the observation hut used during World War II to spot planes flying over the area. Stella Hay McLam became librarian until July 1, 1956 when Beverly Butler Longo, granddaughter of the first librarian, assumed these duties which she carries on today. Library hours at present are Monday, Wednesday and Friday, 2:00-5:00 P.M., 7:00-9:00 P.M.

Fulfilling the expressed wishes of the daughter and sons of Nathan and Susan Blake, the memorial is carried on for "the greatest good to the greatest number, with no partisan spirit but on the broadest fraternal lines; that constancy and good management will prove the strongest incentive to those who follow, continuing the example set so that they too may have a part in upholding and carrying forward the Blake Memorial Library which stands for most blessed memories in a town so dearly loved."

The Valley Health Center was incorporated on June 19, 1956 as a non-profit organization to provide medical care for the rural area embracing the towns of Corinth, Topsham, Orange and parts of Bradford and Newbury, with a population of approximately 2600 to be served within a ten-mile radius. A suitable location was the first concern of its supporters and it was agreed that the village of East Corinth was most centrally situated for the enterprise. A big hurdle was overcome from the start when Bert and Mary Holland purchased from Lawrence M. Jackman and Dorothy J. Neal the home of their great grandmother, Elvira Hall Crown Jackman, in the heart of the village, as a memorial to Mrs. Holland's parents, Harry G. and Mary M. Hunter. With the donation of the building contributions poured in from people of the area, former residents, and friends in near and distant places, who welcomed the opportunity to present a monetary gift outright or in memory of someone.

The Valley Health Center

Voluntary labor for months was supplied by both men and women in the area who served as carpenters, painters, cleaners and architects both inside and outside of the building, from parking lot to second floor where an apartment of four rooms was designed for a doctor's use, or rental. Furnishings were given for use in waiting room, apartment and Center itself. Dawn breakfasts and dinners for organizations swelled the fund to purchase equipment for the Center. In September of 1956 Dr. Eugene Blank of Baltimore arrived but his stay was short as he left two months later for further study in pediatrics. Contacts continued to be made through medical journals and correspondence with prospective doctors for a replacement, all the while extensive improvements and additions being made to the Center. By mid-February of 1957 the Center was ready for public inspection, and brochures prepared to send out to doctors interested in establishing a rural practice.

In August of 1957 Dr. Albert Rouhe of Beaver Falls, Pennslyvania arrived with his wife and three sons but his stay ended in November when he left for California for advanced study in radiology. While here he was busy administering injections for protection against an outbreak of Asiatic Flu which was sweeping the nation, and carrying on a large practice over the countryside. He predicted that within six months a permanent doctor would be located at the Valley Health Center and in this regard he spoke truly as Dr. Frances Adams Olsen, honor graduate of the Women's Medical College in Philadelphia, arrived the latter part of June, 1958 upon completion of a year of interneship in the Philadelphia General Hospital. The Center felt extremely fortunate in obtaining her services as immediately following her acceptance of resident doctor she and her husband, Hugh, and four children ranging in ages from 17 to 12, were featured as the family of the month in a popular national magazine which brought her many favorable offers from all over the country. It was the first time since 1921, when Dr. Robert Deming after a two-year practice left to become Superintendent of the Glencliff, New Hampshire Tubercular Sanitorium, that a physician was to settle here permanently. Preceding him was Dr. Ruthven Rowland who studied medicine after the library dedication and practiced this profession locally until 1917 when he left Vermont to become a Universalist minister. Dr. Joseph Dow, of West Topsham, old-time country doctor par excellence who is remembered with great affection by many people in the area, had a wide practice until his death in June, 1955 in his 82nd year.

So extensive did Dr. Olsen's practice become within a year that a second doctor was considered to assist her at the Center but to date she is carrying on alone, working long hours to take care of many patients in an area far greater than originally contemplated. She is ably assisted at the Center by Stella Hay McLam, laboratory technician who received her training in the early years of the organization, Joyce Milne O'Meara of East Orange, office manager, and Margaret Shearer Pierson who works specified hours each week as relief in the office and laboratory.

The Valley Health Center is now fully supplied with laboratory and X-ray machines, and all other medical, diagnostic and therapeutic facilities that a small modern hospital might be proud to own. Improvements continue to be made yearly in both the floor plans and equipment to place it foremost among medical centers of this type in the state. A well-stocked drug room takes care of the medication prescribed for patients.

In 1963 a Valley Health Center Auxiliary was formed to work for the benefit of the organization and from its funds, raised through many different projects, several expensive pieces of equipment have already been purchased and donated, based on suggestions from the trustees. Women of the auxiliary also volunteer each week to package pills to relieve the staff of this routine. A Thrift Shop is located at the rear of the building where serviceable clothing, accessories, household items and commissioned goods are sold by the auxiliary for support of the Center. Officers are Mrs. Alden Slack, President; Mrs. Phyllis Sommer of Waits River, Treasurer; Mrs. Lawrence Jackman, Secretary; Mrs. Wesley McLam, East Topsham, Memberships; Mrs.

Raymond Burroughs, Ways and Means; Mrs. Marie Cavalier, Thrift Shop; Mrs. Willard Martin, Catering; Mrs. Morris Knapp, Publicity; Mrs. Irwin Worthley, East Topsham, Vounteer Workers.

From the day the Valley Health Center was organized a governing board of fifteen trustees from the area was established. Five are elected at the annual meeting in May to serve a three-year period. Their duties are to conduct all business pertaining to the organization. Officers are elected from the board immediately following the annual meeting, the latter open to all contributors to the Center wherever they may reside. The first President was C. John Williams who served in this capacity for three years and as Committee Chairman was instrumental in getting a permanent doctor for the Center. Present officers are Lawrence M. Jackman, President; George Gibby, West Topsham, Vice President; Mrs. Harold Parker, East Topsham, Secretary and Clerk; Bert T. Holland, Jr., Treasurer, serving in this office since date of organization. Other trustees are Alvin McLeay, Dr. Albert Warsley, West Topsham; Irwin Worthley, Mrs. Harold Heath, George Hodge, Edward Hall, East Topsham; Alden Slack, Willard Martin, Edward Perdue, Mary Hunter Holland who is a permanent member of the board, all of town; Harold Sinclair, Bradford line.

The Valley Health Center has more than fulfilled its purpose of supplying medical care and treatment in a rural area despite the shortage of doctors. Its efficiency has increased each year with the addition of the latest equipment as replacements are found necessary. Visitors are continually impressed with the wide range of its facilities, while patients are appreciative of the skill and courtesy of the staff. The success of the Center has been responsible in part for the location in town of a growing number of retired people from larger communities outside the state who find this service an influential attraction. The Center without a doctor would be worthless. To paraphrase a verse from Ecclesiasticus which well expresses the respect and confidence of the people in the area for the capabilities of Dr. Frances Olsen, it can honestly be said that they "Honour their physician with the honor due unto her."

MARCH 15, 1786, the same town officers were re-elected with the addition of Tiding Men, Brander of Horses, Leather Scaler, Sealer of Weights and Measures; all men to be called to account for not working out their portion of taxes on highways.

March 1787, Town Treasurer to pay for a Pound when it is builded; Robert Rowe elected first Pound Keeper.

March, 1790, twelve surveyors of highways or road commissioners elected, also four hay wards. Fragment of first tax list of town in existence, valuations in English money, included names of polls, oxen 1, 2 and 3 years old, horses 2 and 1 years old, improved and unimproved lands, totals missing.

March, 1792, for first time Selectmen were elected as listers, with town clerk always a member of this board until 1796. Tax list totaled 450 pounds.

March, 1795, meeting held in Robert Rowe's barn. Voted to collect taxes on lands without clear titles. At second meeting that month it was voted that town meetings in "futer" shall be held at Mr. Robert Rowe's. Three auditors elected for first time to "settel" town accounts. Grand list totaled 159 pounds, 15 shillings, not in full.

March, 1797, taxes raised in the species of the United States for first time.

March, 1798, Voted that rams shall not run at large from and after the first day of September until the 15th day of November, or said rams shall be forfeited. Passed over article 9 to see if the town will help the Poor.

March, 1799, Voted to set up the job of "constabel" to lowest bidder, Isaac Drew elected. Grand List of town now included Traders, Clocks and Watches, and Stallions, totaling $7783.50 in town taxes and $1458.00 in state taxes; 228 property owners listed. At a special meeting in May a demand was made of Proprietors Col. John Taplin and Henry Moore to surrender in writing the Publick Lands the next time these two gentlemen officially met.

February, 1800, special meeting to elect new tax collector and constable, office going to Joel Adams who bid twenty-four dollars for the position, his reimbursement and livelihood to come from fees and percentage of town and county taxes collected.

March, 1800, for the first time an Overseer of the Poor is mentioned, his accounts to be settled and adjusted by a committee appointed to confer with the town treasurer. In September it was voted to build a new pound where the old one stood, forty feet square and eight feet high with post and rails, the rails to be three inches thick and six inches wide, to be set up at vendue to the lowest bidder for the building of same. Jonathan Tenney bid twenty dollars, agreeing to have it ready by June 1st.

April, 1801, Joel Adams resigned from his job as tax collector and constable, Benjamin Norris agreeing to take on these duties for the twenty-sixth part of the taxes collected. The following year he bid the same position off for $22.50 in the expectation of clearing a handsomer profit. Horses would not be running at large when he traveled the highways unless their owners were willing to pay a fine.

When Horses Were Not Allowed to Run at Large

In March of 1803 three listers were again elected, usurping the extra-curricular duties of the selectmen. Benjamin Norris lowered his bid to twenty dollars for the position of constable and tax collector as he was to have "the abatement of taxes." The list of surveyors of highways had grown to eighteen and hay wards now numbered twelve. The Poor are mentioned by name when Betsey Clough and her daughter were bid off to Peter Barnes for twenty-eight dollars for the year, he to supply them with vittles, drink and lodging. A committee was appointed to sue the town proprietors if it could not obtain the Publick Lands any other way. As town meetings were called on the average of at least once a month whenever a number of voters petitioned for same by posting a notice on the Center Meeting House door or some other designated place, a fixed date for March meeting was set for the second Monday in March in the "futer." Before adjournment Dr. Joshua Tenney's bill of $19.63 against the Widow Chase was approved for payment, and the voters were unanimous in binding themselves to defend individual taxpayers against any suits brought against them by the Proprietors.

The list of families warned out of town was unusually long during these years to protect the taxpayers from being obligated for their support if called upon; most of these indigents had large families. By 1805 it was necessary to appoint three Overseers of the Poor to handle the situation. Andrew McFarland succeeded Benjamin Norris as tax collector, bidding twelve dollars for the office which allowed him abatement of State and County taxes only, but he was replaced by popular Caleb Ladd two weeks later when he agreed to serve for seventeen dollars, plus town fees.

Fireworks broke out at two special meetings in 1806 when two different committees reported that the roads in town had not been laid out and recorded according to law. They recommended that the Selectmen be directed to resurvey the roads as the law directs in or as nigh as is possible to the place where the old roads were laid. Twenty-two surveyors of highways were elected to be responsible for the roads in their neighborhoods, subject to approval of the selectmen. Another headache for the voters was the report that no returns had been made to the Town Treasurer of the amount of tax bill for 1805 which was still in the hands of the collector. Nor did anyone know what money was due the Treasurer. Between ordering paupers out of town at good profit to Selectmen, Town Clerk and Constable serving the Warrant, and surveying roads in all areas, town officials had a busy year. In an angry mood it was voted that rams could run at large anytime of year their owners saw fit.

In 1807 John McKeen bid off the job of tax collector and constable for nothing but refused to give sufficient security to indemnify the town, and the job went to Christopher Avery when he bid four cents for the office. A mother and three children were put up for bid, one of the children bid off separately for forty cents per week as he was old enough to work, being 7 years of age.

March, 1810, voted to build a Pound of stone, all horses and rams to be impounded therein if running at large. Two weeks later the Pound was changed to timber, the bidder to be responsible to keep it in good repair for fifteen years with a bonus of the old timber from the previous one. Daniel McCrillis put in a low bid of $30.00 for the job with the privilege of cutting timber from the Publick Lot for the building of same.

When John Armon and wife were bid off for $70.00 in 1811 Dr. Joshua Tenney was to have use of their cow, pig and household furniture. Within two years regulations for care of the poor were tightened, the bidder being required to give bonds to the town as guarantee of providing good and sufficient care. At the end of the year they were to be inspected by the Overseer and if not well "cloathed" when returned to the town, the bidder would have a proportionate amount deducted from the balance due him. In the future the town would also pay all doctor bills incurred by the poor.

In October, 1816, William Spencer, town agent, was ordered to attend the next legislature at Montpelier in behalf of the town to make defense against the town of Richmond in a pauper case, which after several years of wrangling was decided in favor of the latter town. A Work House with farm and buildings thereon was voted down two years later but the Overseers of the Poor were given the privilege of binding out children under age until they reached their majority, with the stipulation that the minors were "to be put to school sufficient for their schooling." The price of oxen per day on the highways equaled that of their owners, the selectmen to assess the price for use of tools provided by the laborers. The sum of $224.00 was voted to pay the highway fine and repair roads ordered by the County, an indication that the roads of Corinth were still in poor condition. David Ring's bill against the town for injuries received by him and his horse on the bridge near Johnson Mills at the Center was referred to the auditors for settlement.

Following an Act of Legislature in October, 1820, a market road was surveyed and laid out leading from Chelsea Turnpike near Watson Mills in Barre through the towns of Orange, Topsham, Corinth, and down the Waits River to the River Road in Bradford, the distance through Corinth being 8 miles, 136 rods. At the following March meeting it was voted not to approve the proposed Amendment to the Constitution by the Council of Errors, which remains an enigma as no further reference was given. The sum of $2,000.00 voted in October to establish the County buildings on Fort Hill in Corinth was an empty gesture as most of the voters were certain Chelsea would remain the county seat. The schooling of poor minors in town was necessary until they became of age but the most they could be assured of was twelve weeks per year in many of the district schools. In a generous mood, the voters approved $800.00 to be divided equally between the River Road and Bear Notch Road.

Another Pound was found necessary in 1825, this time of stone, 40 feet square, and to be set within one mile of the Congregational Meetinghouse on the Main Road, the builder to find land to set it on at his own cost and to find all materials to build same. Further requirements included five-foot high walls, four feet thick at the bottom and two feet thick at the top, with a stock of timber 12 inches square on the top, with a gate and lock. The job was set up and bid off to Henry Doe for $52.00.

October 2, 1826, the surveyors of highway took the points of a compass and the distance of a Pent Road leading from Col. Gouldsburn Taplin to Slab City, beginning near his house and ending up by Nehemiah Taplin's farm on the Topsham line.

Five dollars of David Carr's fine was remitted after he had been found guilty of treating tiplers in 1828, and the same courtesy was extended to Nathan B. Taplin for a Breach of Peace for striking Joseph Miles in town meeting. Six cents additional on the dollar on the List was raised, same to be paid in labor to build bridges in town that were carried off by the Freshit. On November 15 the selectmen caused to be laid out a village in the east part of Corinth beginning at the Topsham line near Brigham Taplin's extending south through what was formerly called Taplin's village to a small brook that crosses the road about eight rods south of the brick yard and from there south to the Willoughby Corliss Bridge, said village to be known and called the East Village in Corinth in future. They were also forced by the county court to accept the petition of taxpayers living in East Corinth for a new road leading from the village through Jacob Hubbard's land along to the main road near Col. Towle's house, which would include part of the Brook Road today.

The town was prospering by September, 1830 when it was voted to give the selectmen twenty-five cents per day for their services. By 1833 the selectmen were ordered to repair the old Pound or build a new one, Melitiah Corliss being elected Pound Keeper.

East Corinthians won another battle against the selectmen in 1835 when the county court ordered them to build a road from the Widow Patsy Corliss' bridge to the Peletiah Corliss Bridge (Liva Londry Sinclair) in Bradford along the Waits River. Because of this ruling they refused to build a new road from the Vershire line to Christopher Avery's in South Corinth. The town agent tried to have the ruling set aside at the December term of court but failed and the taxpayers voted at March meeting, 1836, to build the Waits River road as ordered. The year ended on the bright side when it was voted on December 29 to receive Corinth's proportion of the surplus or public money from the federal government which might be deposited with the State, agreeable to an Act of Legislature passed November 17th. This windfall would be used in part for school taxes in the future and the balance to buy a town poor house in 1851. There were now thirty-three surveyors of highways to take care of the rapid changes being made throughout town as early roads leading over the hills were "thrown up" in favor of new ones that followed rivers and streams and wound around hills instead of directly over them. Never again will there be as many roads in town as there were 125 years ago when the network spread in every direction, many of them admitted to be bad when damages were paid William Page for injuries received by falling from his horse in consequence of "a hole", and Charles Childs for a colt that got damaged in a bridge near Daniel Cooke's. An innovation that met with the approval of the townspeople at this time was the sale at Public Vendue of all new roads laid out by the selectmen, the lowest bidder getting the contract. Roads did not improve under this plan.

By 1839 a second constable was added to the list of town officers, the honor going to the lowest bidder. Doctoring the poor was now set up for bids, including paupers in adjoining towns "that belong to Corinth." All were not doctors by training but that fact seemed to be of small consideration when the lowest bid was accepted. Among the paupers women outnumbered men three to one, most of them being widows. The town was more merciful on its transients as they were no longer warned out of town and would receive "doctoring" if needed.

The year 1841 brought a big change when constables were elected without bidding for the job. Conditions for the paupers were brightening when the town ordered that the low bidder for Widow Collins supply her with gown, shirts, shoes and stockings, another widow to have one calico gown in addition to other clothing. Cloth to make a "pare of pantaloons and a new suit, also new cloth for a coat," was ordered for a minor.

There was no argument in 1841 when the county court agreed with Corinth petitioners that a new road be built leading from Eagle Hollow by the new Baptist Meeting House to Cooke's store; also a new road from John Richardson's house near the old Baptist Church to Washington as the present one was very hilly and circuitous. A new highway to Washington would shorten the distance by five miles and avoid hills, greatly accommodating individual and public travel. According to the investigating commissioners it would be a beautiful road, following the valley near the stream, the ascents and descents being easy and gradual in contrast to the former road which was rough and "nigh on impassable" in winter owing to deep snows and drifts. Both roads could be built at no extraordinary expense, and it was so voted when it was pointed out that travel to Montpelier and Burlington would be much easier and that almost all the heavy articles of merchandise coming into Corinth were transported over the Washington Road.

It was in 1845 that the Overseer of the Poor was given the right to remove paupers from the homes of bidders in case of misuse or abuse, at the expense of those who bid them off. Perhaps it was the tragedy of the Taplin tots who starved and froze to death under the care of a supposedly fine family that brought about this change in treatment of the poor. From now on they would be well clothed and well taken care of, children would be sent to school at least two months a year, and in future the Overseer of the Poor and the Town Agent would decide who were suitable persons to keep the poor, having the right to remove them from a home if neglect was found.

At town meeting in 1847 the votes for license or no license were taken, agreeable to an Act of Legislature passed in October, 1846. The vote stood 152 No License, 48 For License, so liquor would continue to be sold freely for another five years. Pleased with the defeat of temperance regulations, the daily wage of all town officers was increased to fifty cents. The following year in September Paul Dillingham easily won the majority vote for Governor and Edmund Weston representative to Congress.

The selectmen were directed to pledge the credit of the town in 1849 in a sum not to exceed $150.00 to pay for a survey of the contemplated Rail Road through Corinth on the two routs contemplated, one up Waits River and the other through Goose Green and the Center of Town, thence to Washington.

Relationships with the East Village were cordial when a survey was made of the road leading from Topsham line to the Waits River Road south of said river, the spire of the Union Meeting House used as a point, the road widening opposite the front door of the large brick house of John Chapman along down to the abutment of the bridge and south to the house of Edward Keenan. But the next year it was voted to do nothing about repairing the road torn out by the late freshet near George W. Stevens Tavern bordering the muster grounds until the inhabitants got out a court order.

In 1850 Melitiah Willis, Pound Keeper, agreed that his barn and barnyard would be the Pound but one year was all he could stand and the selectmen were ordered to provide a place for stray animals. Within a few years every man's dooryard became a Pound, doing away with the public pen. Forty dollars was voted to Mr. Burroughs in appreciation of his services in attending the Beckwith family during the small pox, and the town voted in favor of license when it authorized Josiah Dearborn to sell intoxicating liquors by the small measure at his store for medicinal, chemical and mechanical purposes for one year, beginning May 1, 1851, agreeable to the state law approved November 13, 1850, and agreeable to the regulations of Corinth hereafter annexed. Regulations required him to keep a true account of all liquors sold, to whom sold, said records to be exhibited to the selectmen at any time and at all times they might wish. Jacob Steward was granted a license to sell small beer and cider.

All paupers were removed to the Town Farm in 1852 by the Overseer, he to have the privilege of furnishing the farm with familiar tools, etc. Sixty years later the town farm would go out of existence.

Temperance was still the big question in town when the voters met on February 8, 1853 to express an opinion for or against a law passed by the legislature entitled an "Act to Prevent the Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors for the Purpose of Drinking," to take effect the second Tuesday of March, 1853. Results — 158 No, 118 Yes. A license was granted James C. Stevens of East Corinth in May to keep an inn for benefit of the traveling public, also to Nathaniel Andrews and it can be assumed something other than light beer was sold. The selectmen were criticized when the townspeople insisted that they warn future annual March meetings according to law, namely on the first Tuesday in February and March.

There were 37 surveyors of highways in 1857 and the number had not changed by 1868. The town was having a delinquency problem in 1869 when the selectmen appointed six special police to preserve order and decorum at a performance in the Center Church on the eve of September 8. Pike Hill was not far away and the miners felt that they needed some form of entertainment, even if they were not cordially welcomed by the townspeople. On November 16 an act was passed by the legislature enabling towns in the Counties of Orange and Windsor to aid in the construction of the West Fairlee Railroad but it was not until February of 1872 that the Town of Corinth voted to join in the venture by subscribing to the capital stock of $40,000.00, appointing G. N. Winchester, S. C. Clement and Nathan Taplin commissioners. No part of the sum was to be paid by the town until the construction of the railroad was contracted for along the whole line to Barre or Montpelier or beyond; furthermore the part running through Corinth must be completed before any money changed hands. The railroad was to run through or near the Center of Town, connecting with the Barre & Montpelier Railroad at Barre or the Central Railroad at Montpelier. It was all a pipe dream and the only time any part of the town had a railroad running through it was in an advertisement printed in national magazines a dozen years ago when the New York Central Railroad showed its passengers comfortably ensconsed in a modern train, looking out on a winter scene of East Corinth which was still eight miles from the nearest tracks.

The highway from East Corinth by the George Stevens Tavern near the muster grounds was altered and improved in 1874 by the addition of a new road leading down to the Bradford Highway. Money must have been tight two years later when the town allowed a tax discount of ten per cent if all taxes were paid on or before December 1st but there was enough to buy a safe for town records in 1877. Children continued to be bound out by parents as shown in the agreement between John Rowell and E. J. Avery whereby Willard Rowell would live and work for said Avery until he was twenty-one years old. Avery was to clothe and school Willard and pay him $200.00 in money at expiration of the contract.

At the end of the first century of town meetings on December 20, 1880 Mansfield Taplin, third generation, was granted a license to keep an inn and victualling house at his residence, being permitted to sell all kinds of fruits and provisions for one year. Earlier in the year taxpayers voted to have the selectmen subscribe for the volumes of Miss Hemenway's Gazetteer, the Town of Corinth appearing briefly in Volume II. Special constables were requested to keep the peace on such and other occasions at meetings of the West Corinth Church on the Sabbath which heretofore had been interrupted and greatly disturbed by certain disorderly persons. Those miners again? The selectmen complied by appointing Henry Clark and Sceva True for the public good and order in that part of town. Voters strongly supported Roswell Farnham of Bradford for Governor, and elected W. B. D. Avery to the state legislature. He would be able to explain the Constitutional Amendment when it appeared a few years later requiring state legislators to take oath that they did not hold any office of profit or trust under the Authority of Congress, subject to the pains and penalties of perjury. The selectmen were instructed to shingle and make other necessary repairs to the Town House as the voters entered the second century of organized town government.

There were no early records of public stocks for the punishment of evil doers, nor a whipping post for the more aggressive. Deer reeves and hog reeves were never elected to office as was done in other towns, the Pound Keeper being considered adequate for these duties.

Ransome Post G.A.R. of East Corinth on Memorial Day

The oldest organization still active in town is the Masonic Lodge, founded in 1868, known as Minerva Lodge No. 86, F. and A. M. Minerva Chapter No. 68, Order of Eastern Star, was organized in 1907, both groups meeting on the top floor of the present town hall in Cookeville. As old as the Minerva Lodge but long out of existence was Ransome Post No. 7 of the Grand Army of the Republic founded by Civil War veterans in town shortly after establishment of the national order on April 6, 1866. For years Memorial Day was held sacred by the aging soldiers as they marched to the cemetery to hold solemn exercises, accompanied by the auxiliary known as the Women's Relief Corps and the junior group, Sons of Veterans. No further records of their activities were found beyond 1920. Townspeople were joiners in past years when the Women's Christian Temperance Union and its junior department, the Loyal Temperance League, abhorred the evil of alcoholic beverages, root beer suckers included; the Modern Woodmen of America who flourished for awhile; the Knights of King Arthur, a juvenile organization for boys before the days of Scout troops; and Goldenrod Grange No. 286 of East Corinth which enjoyed a few decades of activity before disbanding.

There were many other temporary organizations throughout town of which there are few records but the most successful and dominant was the Women's Relief Corps that achieved fame long before formal organization when the ladies of Corinth worked like beavers from 1861-65 to furnish supplies for the Hospital Department at Washington, D. C. during the Civil War. According to an article printed in the Orange County Telegram on September 26, 1862 in one year they sent 41 quilts and puffs, 16 blankets, one cotton mattress, one long shawl, 116 pair of socks, 58 pillows, 76 pillow cases, 61 towels, 51 sheets, 12 pair cotton flannel drawers, four pair of pants, 25 hospital shirts, 55 common shirts, two dressing gowns, 120 pounds of dried apples, 1343 rolls of bandage, 39 pounds of lint, 58 handkerchiefs, 6 pairs of slippers, 12 quarts dried berries, a six-ounce sponge, 11 coats, 1 vest, 8 tin cups, 2 teapots, 3 jars jelly, 3 boxes of buttons, tape, needles and thread, 12 fans, 4 bundles clean old cotton, 25 books, backgammon and chess board, 1 package oil silk, 12½ pounds of cornstarch, 2 pounds of farina, 2 bottles of raspberry jam, $43.00 in cash, and prepaid freight of $8.00. This was long before the founding of the American Branch of Red Cross by Clara Barton.

Some people always want to know when the first of anything happened or was possessed by an individual and a few known facts are given here.

First and only telephone in town for several years was listed in the George Way Store in East Corinth in 1884. The dial system went into operation on November 7, 1956, ending the former personal contacts between local operator and patron.

First furnace in home of Charles Page in 1896.

First automobile, 1904, 4½ HP Oldsmobile with steering lever, Winthrop T. Jackman.

First to defend locally in public debate the right of suffrage for women, in 1910, Carrie Rowland and Dama George.

First installation of acetylene lights for illumination of a home, 1913, Winthrop T. Jackman.

First Delco system to generate electricity for home lighting and utilities, 1917, Alfred C. Jackman.

Model N Ford, 22 H.P. , Owned by Winthrop T. Jackman in 1906

within a few years to the Bluebirds 4-H Club.

First radio, 1922, Alfred C. Jackman.

1929, power lines built by Green Mountain Power Corporation to electrify the village of East Corinth. In 1932-33 Fred Munch of New York brought power into the farm areas. The Washington Electric Co-operative was purchased under the auspices of the Rural Electrification Administration Act in January of 1943 from Mr. Munch and today furnishes power to a wide rural area.

First television set installed by Fred Jewell in southwest part of town on Jewell Hill in 1949. First in East Corinth area, John Williams, 1952, after he built nearly a mile of line on hills on west side of village and installed booster to relay picture.

The hills and valleys of Corinth are as beautiful today as they were 200 years ago when genial Gov. Benning Wentworth of New Hampshire granted the first charter on February 4. May they remain as unspoiled in another 200 years so that others may enjoy the same natural beauty that inspired the members of the history committee when they wrote the last word of the first history of Corinth in 1964.

Folklore

FOLKLORE IS a word that covers many subjects but can be defined quite simply as the traditional beliefs, customs and stories that people themselves have handed down from one generation to another. As you read the following pages you will get a glimpse of Corinth folk in sayings, expressions, stories, autograph rhymes, and epitaphs. May you use and enjoy their remedies and recipes, learn of their frugal ways, and laugh at their shrewdness and dry humor. Through these pages will be kept alive a small portion of the Folklore of Corinth, even though some of it "ain't necessarily so" in exact wording or detail.

Corinth Fort A Refuge

In the early spring of 1784 James Marsh of New Hampshire brought his family to Fort Wait in Corinth. Marsh had purchased a tract of land in Waterbury, a wild, unsettled territory. Because of the dangers which might be encountered on the long trip to his new holdings, he left his wife and five children at the fort. For company he took along his two oldest children, Elias and Irene, also his younger son James. They tramped on snowshoes hauling behind them a sled packed with provisions.

Temporary shelter was provided in a rough cabin left by surveyors on the Marsh property. As soon as Marsh had planted his spring corn and provided enough game and fish to last the children for a week, he returned to Fort Wait for the remainder of his family.

He was delayed in Corinth and the children left in Waterbury became desperate and hungry. Being real pioneers, Elias, Irene and James set out for the McFairlane cabin, 13 miles through the forest to Richmond, where they arrived after many harrowing experiences.

Three weeks later James Marsh and his family arrived in Waterbury to find their cabin empty. One can well imagine their dismay. A passing settler soon brought the joyous news that the children were well and safe at the McFairlanes' home.

Racin' and Raslin'

In the earliest days of Corinth an Indian family used to camp on the flat leading toward Page Cemetery in Northeast Corinth.

A short distance up the hill Jonathan (Jock) Corliss lived with his wife and children.

The Indian and white children often played together. Two of their favorite games were racing and wrestling. The Indian boys always won the "racin" and the Corliss boys the "raslin".

Indian Strategy

Mary Ella Dearborn, wife of George Dearborn, lived on Dearborn Hill. Mary often told of the Indians she remembered coming to her father's house.

They were friendly Indians, probably Algonquins; apparently all they wanted was food for she recalled how they would squat on the floor perfectly silent and expressionless. Finally her parents would be obliged to give them food before they traveled on their way.

Bear Traps in Corinth

The first settlers of Corinth were greatly annoyed by bears who were continually raiding their farm yards, carrying off young stock after wrecking the crude shelters in which they were penned. To protect themselves from the marauders, log-traps were built. These were made of heavy logs set in a definite pattern. When the bear attempted to steal the bait placed for him, he would touch a spring that caused a heavy log to fall suddenly, holding him fast. Mr. Joseph Knight, who lived in the north part of town, caught two in this manner.

School Days

For many years Emma Humphrey Wilson taught school in South Corinth and Corinth Center. She had a fine reputation as an excellent teacher, especially for the eager scholars. She was a strong believer in progressive education and some of her pupils accomplished two years' work in one. She had infinite patience with the ones willing to learn, but gave little attention to the slower pupils.

Her flare for fashion never went beyond a sensible black dress with a long full skirt. This garment was the inspiration for a school boys' prank. Taking advantage of Teacher's nearsightedness the boys used their jack-knives to raise slivers in the aisles. When Emma came sweeping by the slivers cracked and snapped at every turn.

In 1830 Charles Page attended school in East Corinth Village which was located directly across the road from the present school. He often told his son, Charlie, of the pranks the schoolboys played. Sometimes they tried to set the schoolhouse on fire by shovelling coals from the fireplace into the walls. Their plans were always foiled by an alert schoolmaster.

Charlie liked to tell stories of his own school days. There was one schoolmaster who always had a little whiskey with him and took an occasional nip behind the schoolhouse. This schoolmaster allowed the older boys to go upstairs to play cards and drink cider. At times he would call up "Ye'd better come down here." More often he would join them.

Alexander Twilight

When Alice Hood of Taplin Hill, now seventy-six years old, was a tiny girl the family cat presented them with kittens. One of the kittens was coal black. The mother cat wanted nothing of it and dropped it into an empty barrel in the attic. Alice rescued the little outcast and assumed its care, even getting up in the night to feed it with a spoon.

About this time a dear old lady came to visit the family. She was a native of Corinth who had been away for years in the Mission Field.

She interested herself at once in the kitten and suggested that it be named Asa Twilight. This brought to mind the family of Asa Twilight, first negro to settle in Corinth in 1795.

Alexander Twilight, son of Asa, was born in Corinth September 23, 1795. His father died young and Alexander was left to his own resources. His greatest ambition was to become a preacher and teacher. This he achieved after working his way through Randolph High School and Middlebury College.

Following his graduation in 1829, Reverend Twilight and his wife, Mercy, went to Brownington as minister and teacher at the Orleans County Grammar School. He saw the need for an academy for boys but no help was forthcoming from the townspeople. Alexander was determined to build the best school in northern Vermont, so procuring an ox and a few materials he set to work. With super-human strength assisted only by his ox he built a structure from granite blocks quarried on his own land.

The last great slab had been hauled up the ramp, four stories high, when the ox looked down. Frightened by the height he refused to descend. Alexander prodded and coaxed to no avail. In the end he was forced to kill the faithful beast.

Alexander named his school Athenian Hall and it did indeed become the best in northern Vermont, made so by his excellent teaching, religious discipline and integrity. The Hall is now a museum owned by the Orleans

County Historical Society. Alexander Twilight died on June 19, 1857.

An Expensive Shawl

Mrs. Welton, mother of Carrie Welton Woods of Corinth Corner, often worked out doing housework. She received only fifty cents a week for her labor.

This was during the Civil War, when wool was very high and scarce. Mrs. Welton had set her heart on a new woolen shawl which cost $60.00.

With perseverance and a strong will Mrs. Welton worked 120 weeks to get the $60.00 and bought her shawl.

A Devilish Contraption

When William H. Thompson represented the Town of Corinth at the state legislature in 1904, the important question before that body was what to do about the hazard of that new-fangled machine, the automobile. The representative from Randolph declared that it was not safe for a woman to drive a horse on the highway when one of those devilish contraptions came along. It was his opinion that special roads should be built for them to run on, just like the railroad had tracks, and keep them off the highway. Thompson was in agreement that it was a sensible proposal but nothing ever came of it.

The Goose and The Pie

When Corinth was first settled the family of Benjamin Muzzey lived on a hill beyond the Reuben Page farm in northeastern Corinth. The location is still called Muzzey Hill.

One of the boys, Leif, was somewhat weak-minded but like all boys enjoyed eating.

One day his mother made a custard pie and set it in the pantry window to cool. At suppertime the pie was gone. Turning to Leif his mother said, "Leif Muzzey, where is my custard pie?" Quickly Leif replied, "Goose got it. Took it up in the bushes and et it,' he did."

Mystery Of The Bell

Years ago when Elizabeth Rowland was teaching school on Taplin Hill, boys and girls were as full of pranks as they are today.

All one day a bell rang intermittently. It was plain from the impish glances of the boys that mischief was afoot. Elizabeth said not a word.

After school some of the older girls helped their young teacher search for the source of the ringing sound and under the schoolhouse they found a cowbell. A rope attached to the bell ran through a hole in the floor to the desk of one of the boys. The girls removed the bell and tied in its place a large potato.

The next morning passed quietly. The boys looked at each other in puzzlement and one by one asked to leave the room. Each returned with a sheepish grin and grudging admiration for Elizabeth.

Stove Blacking for Sale

A hundred years ago pack peddlers were common. Mandy Rowland of East Corinth was scrubbing her clothes one morning when a pack peddler came to her door. Mandy didn't welcome the interruption. She told him she had no need of his wares and went about her work. The peddler persisted, insisting that she buy some stove blacking. Mandy scrubbed on. In exasperation the man exclaimed. "Say ma'am don'cha know ye can't eat your money?" Quick-witted and sharp-tongued Mandy retorted, "Wal' I certainly can't eat stove blacking."

A Lesson Learned The Hard Way

Grenville Powers, born in Corinth in 1821, attended Corinth Academy. His father believed strongly in education and Grenville attended school six months of each year until he was twenty-one.

He and his chum, Arb, were great gigglers and mischief makers. Their parents at one time withdrew them from school and sent them into the winter wood lot to chop. The treatment worked. Knee-deep snow and blistered hands soon persuaded the boys that the scholar's life was much to be preferred. They returned to home and school with promises of good behaviour.

Grenville taught singing schools for many years throughout Orange County. It is said that he did more for the musical world hereabouts than any other man in the state.

A Horse Tale

In December 1857 one of the sons of William Grant, Esq., of East Corinth returned home from a party at 2:00 A.M. (The Grants occupied the house where Vetha Holland now lives.) As he was unhitching his horse, a spirited animal, it bolted and ran up the street to the home of Nathan Blake, a merchant (now the John Williams home.) On the south side was the kitchen door. The horse hit it with such force that the bolt snapped and in he dashed. He continued on into the parlor bedroom where slept Nathan, his wife and two children. There he overturned and extinguished a night light, shattered a mirror and broke the footrail of the bed. The Blakes awoke to chaos and darkness. The horse uttered a piteous neigh and Blake gasped, "A ---- horse!"

Just Joe

In the early 1880's Saturday afternoons were usually very busy times at the East Corinth Village store. Farmers and their wives drove in bringing butter and eggs to swap for groceries and dry goods.

One cold day in early November business was brisk at Kemp's Store. Among the customers were a number of women. Near the back of the store several men and boys were gathered around talking and laughing. They grew noisy and it disturbed Mr. Kemp. He recognized one voice much louder than the rest and knew its owner had had enough cider to limber up his tongue. He walked over to them and said, "Joe, I'll give you 50¢ if you'll go home." "By cracky! I'll do it, Mr. Kemp," Joe replied. He went out the back door and soon the rattle of his old buckboard was heard as the horse trotted up the street. It was much quieter in the store and trading went on briskly for some time. Then, Mr. Kemp thought he heard a familiar voice. After listening a minute he walked to the back of the store, and there was Joe. "I thought I gave you 50¢ to go home, Joe," he said. "So you did, Mr. Kemp, so you did, but you didn't say nothin about my stayin' there."

Nathan Eats in The Kitchen

Nathan Blake, III, of East Corinth was truly democratic, and perhaps the wealthiest man in this small village.

One day in the early 1800's, Mary, the Blake's hired girl was setting the table. Mrs. Blake took Mary to one side and told her in a low voice that as long as they had company coming for dinner, perhaps she'd better eat in the kitchen.

Nathan was entertaining the guests in the parlor so suspected nothing.

When dinner was ready and everyone had gathered about the table, Nathan noticed there was no plate for Mary. Calmly and quietly he gathered up his plate and silver and said, "Guess I'll eat in the kitchen and keep Mary company."

Thus dinner proceeded without the host that day.

Sap Spouts and Sap Nails

Some of the first metal sap spouts were only half round pieces of tin. Trees were tapped by boring a hole and cleaning the bark from the area around it. A sap spout was then inserted beneath the hole and under that a nail was driven to hold the wooden sap bucket.

Charles Page of East Corinth made sap nails in his village blacksmith shop from the backs of old scythe blades. Joe Londry, a jolly old Frenchman, often stopped at the blacksmith shop to pass the time of day with Charles. Joe would light his old clay pipe from a red hot sap nail on which Charles was working. Thus Joe saved a match and had a good visit to boot.

Peacocks in Corinth

Nathan Carter, grandfather of Karl of Taplin Hill, was given some peacocks by relatives on one of the Pacific Islands. After a time they multiplied. One young cock was picked on by all the other cocks. When he could stand it no longer he would fly over the woods to the adjoining Hutchinson farm. The Carters would go to the Hutchinsons' and bring him back but as soon as the other cocks started their teasing off he would fly again to Hutchinsons'. Finally Nathan gave the bird to Bertha Hutchinson (Leo Hutchinson's mother) and she kept him the rest of his life. When he died she had him mounted and he can still be seen at the Leo Hutchinson home.

A Pastor Calls Many to His Fold

A bold champion for the truth, Rev. Charles Boynton came to Corinth Center Congregational Church as pastor soon after 1838. He preached the gospel fearlessly and faithfully whether men would bear or forbear.

One Sabbath near the close of his ministerial labors he selected his texts from the 18th Chapter of Acts to perfectly describe his accomplishments in Corinth. In the morning it was, "And he continued there a year and six months teaching the word of God among them." In the afternoon he used the text, "And many of the Corinthians hearing, believed and were baptized."

Seventy-five members were taken into the fellowship during his brief ministry of eighteen months.

Orson Clement

Orson Clement was born in 1838 on a six hundred acre farm between West Corinth and Cookeville. In 1870 he inherited the farm along with several hundred pounds of wool which his father had bought at $1.00 per pound, for speculation.

Following in the footsteps of the elder Clement, Orson stayed on the farm raising sheep and, of course, increasing his store of wool until the old house, the barn and the granary could hold no more.

In 1918, at the outbreak of World War I, there was a severe wool shortage and the government was buying wool from every possible source. Orson refused to sell at the price offered and held out for a ridiculous sum. Over his protests the wool was confiscated at a fair price of $30,000.00. After his death thousands of pounds of wool were found locked in the granary and hidden under hay in the barn. Orson had "outwitted them guv'ment men."

Soon after the wool episode he gave up sheep raising and turned to other ventures. He speculated wildly in oil and real estate spending huge sums for worthless oil stocks and waste land in "boom towns." But luck was with him. From all the reams of worthless stocks, one oil well proved so profitable that he recouped his losses with some to boot. Some of his land deals too turned into money. For property which cost him fifty cents an acre he received $250.00 an acre. One farm netted him $40,000.00. All combined to make Orson one of the wealthiest citizens in town.

Raising colts was his only extravagance. Orson hired Ben Goodrich to break one to drive. For this he paid Ben the goodly sum of twenty-five dollars. When Ben returned the animal he was instructed to "just take it back to the field and let it run with the others." The colt never again was driven and was the only Clement colt ever broken to harness.

Orson was stubborn to the point of pure cussedness. It was against his principles to pay taxes. The only way the collector could get any money out of him was to catch enough colts to bring the amount due at tax sale. Orson would hitch up his horse and drive down behind the sheriff to Cookeville. There he would sit in his old buggy, bid in his colts and pay for them from his huge roll of bills. Orson wasn't paying taxes. He was buying colts.

Arthur Comstock of Corinth once worked on the Clement farm. Orson would never ask the hired man to ride with him. Didn't believe in it! But if Arthur climbed in when Orson's back was turned, he couldn't be said to have made the offer. Once or twice a week they made the trip in silence to the old brick store in Cookeville.

Orson lived frugally to save even a few pennies. He never bought a newspaper, and it is said that he and those of his household ate sparingly on scraps of food. He had one cow, "so old she could have voted," a neighbor remarked. The cow was never milked regularly. When the housekeeper needed a cup or pitcher of milk either she or Orson would amble out and milk the cow.

Mrs. Alice Bradbury was the housekeeper whom Orson had inherited from his father. Orson was a confirmed bachelor. Alice and Orson quarreled frequently and made up regularly. Angry or not she wound his large gold watch every morning, never missing the chore unless she was away.

During one of their quarrels Orson cut his will into pieces. He and Alice patched up their differences but the will was put away still in pieces.

In March 1922 Orson Clement died leaving the greater part of his estate to Dartmouth College. The "Clement Greenhouse" may be seen at Dartmouth today, a monument to Orson and his younger brother who died after attending the college for one year.

Nor did Orson forget his housekeeper. The will, found in fragments, was admitted to probate and bequeathed to Alice Bradbury $1,000.00, and $500.00 to her daughter.

Dilemma of The Extra Cent

Some 100 years ago when Sylvester (Vet) Thompson had his tin shop in Edson Rowland's cellar, he sometimes worked all night.

Here he made by hand sap spouts, sap buckets, heaters, sap pans, sugar pans, dish pans, sugar tins and tin water pails. Vet used to give his waste tin to three boys, Charlie Page, Frank Corliss and Hale Darling. The boys made 100 sap spouts from the waste tin and sold them for $1.00. The money, of course was divided equally, each having 33 cents, with one cent left over. How should they divide one cent among the three? After much deliberation they decided to buy a stick of peppermint candy, divide the candy in three parts, and thus solve the problem.

Buried In A Snow Drift

A man by the name of Orin Hood lived at Corinth Corners. There was only one outside door to his small home. The wind had built such a huge drift against it that Orin had to make a tunnel and crawl through it to get to his woodpile and do his chores.

All's Fair

When Wilson and Amanda Chapman were courting, they attended the East Corinth Fair where Wilson bought a bag of candy. While munching on it he enthusiastically asked Mandy, "Why don't you buy yourself some, it's awful good."

Honest Miller

Walter Burgin had the name of being an honest miller. Everyone liked him. He was a prominent Methodist church member when he lived at Corinth Corner. A story was circulated that he was taking too much toll for grinding grain. The tale was traced to a boy whose father was also prominent in the church. The father asked his son how he could possibly tell such a terrible story about Uncle Walt. The boy replied, "It says in the Bible, 'Woe Unto Ye When All Men speak well of you.' I did not want woe to come to Uncle Walt."

Tainted Meat

Frank Taplin who died in 1932 at the age of 80 or thereabouts had a favorite story he delighted to tell about Uncle Walt Burgin who lived in East Corinth village the latter years of his life. When Frank was a young boy growing up on Taplin Hill, Uncle Walt was the miller. One of the villagers killed a beef but was not sure if the meat was fit to eat; therefore he wanted someone besides himself to try a piece to see if it was untainted. It was suggested that Walt Burgin be the one to test it as he was the only person in town good enough to die.

Migrant House Keepers

In the early days of Corinth homeless maiden ladies and widows often traveled from house to house doing all sorts of tasks for their friends and neighbors in payment for a home for a few days.

One of these house keepers, Arkalina Corliss, was especially loved by the children where she worked. They would often be very jealous if she stayed longer at one place than she did at another.

Arkalina would bustle into a house quite unexpectedly, ready for business, remarking in one breath, "Now, Atlantis, I'll scour off all your dishes with soda, I know you don't have time." Then she would proceed to get all the dishes out and clean the cupboard. After she had finished all the extra tasks about the house, which might take several days, Arkalina would move on to the next neighbor who needed help.

After many years of this work Arkalina became the third wife of Dan McFarlane and kept busy and happy in her own home.

Nancy Ann Clark was another much appreciated house keeper of Corinth. Rather than clean cupboards she preferred to spin the yarn for the family clothing. She was also an expert candle maker and usually planned to make the winter's supply of candles for each family she visited. No doubt she was most welcome, as these were no small tasks.

Still another of these kindly house keepers was Aunt Lydia Quimby Harvey. After her husband passed away she went from home to home helping out to the best of her ability when and where she was needed, never expecting any financial remuneration.

The First Garden

Mercy Harriman Carr came here to live from Bath, New Hampshire. In 1767 when she was only nine years old, she planted the first corn, pumpkins and cucumbers raised in Bath. Mercy carried dirt in her apron to the top of a great rock below Bath Village and there made her garden. Near her home at the lower end of the village between the cabin and the river were four wigwams occupied by Indians. (The people of Bath have placed a marker on Mercy's boulder.)

"A Chaw of Tobaccy"

At one time there was a store on the east side of the road between the Ernest Johnson and the William Baker residences in East Corinth.

One of the proprietors, John Merrill, had a pet buck sheep. Every morning the sheep would come to the store and John would give him a chew of tobacco. After a few pats and kind words from John, the sheep would trot home contentedly chewing his cud.

The Amazing Amaziah

Mrs. Welton of Corinth Corner once worked at the same place as did her brother, Amaziah Dolloph.

The woman for whom they worked had relatives who had joined other Corinthians on a trek to the west. Communications in those days were slow and she had great concern for their welfare.

Amaziah professed to having extra-sensory powers and would often go into trances telling what was happening to the kinsmen of his employer. She later received a letter relating their experiences exactly as Amaziah had described them.

A Mysterious Voice

Gouldsburn Taplin, Jr. of East Corinth had a son, Prentiss, who went to sea at an early age. One night Gouldsburn was awakened by a rap on the door. He answered and a voice said "Prentiss is drowned in the Baltic Sea." He rushed to the door and opened it but no one was there. He called and no one answered. Then he ran into the yard, around the house, up the road and down the road, calling, but no one answered. Prentiss was never heard from thereafter.

Willing Hands and a Kind Heart

Estelle McFarland, known as Aunt 'Stell, lived in the second house below the old Town House, the present Advent Church, in Corinth Center. She loved and was loved by everyone, although she professed to have no use for men.

She never accepted charity in any form. Aunt 'Stell earned her daily bread by hard work caring for her home, keeping two cows and traveling about doing the weekly wash for her neighbors.

Walking was a pleasure for her and usually she refused the offer of a ride by waving her arms and saying, "Go on with ye, git goin, git goin'!"

She preferred to do her work at night. Her employers knew when to expect her and left their doors unlocked. Arriving in a home around ten o'clock in the evening, lantern in one hand, a pail and cake of soap in the other, she would quietly start her work.

After scrubbing the clothes on the old scrub board, hanging them on the line and washing the kitchen floor, she'd quietly pick up the 50 cents left for her on the kitchen table. She'd glance around the "spick span" kitchen, pick up her lantern and pail and trudge off home in the wee small hours of the morning.

Someone once asked why she didn't change her working hours so that she wouldn't be walking the roads in the night. Aunt 'Stell replied, "I pay my taxes and I'll walk these roads when I've a mind to."

Aunt 'Stell was hardy, independent and set in her ways. She was also a kindly Christian soul. For many years she was an outstanding Sunday School Superintendent of the First Congregational Church at Corinth Center.

Jonas Taplin

Jonas Taplin was one of the most tragic figures the town has known. In quick succession death claimed several of his children, then his wife, leaving Jonas with two small children. Jonas, in failing health and plagued with misfortune, was unable to care for them.

The town, as was the custom in the early 1800's, awarded custody of these town charges to the lowest bidder, a family generally considered respectable. The little ones were locked in an unheated shack which stood across from the present home of Nellie Munroe. There they died of exposure and starvation. This final blow broke Jonas' faltering mind and spirit.

Joseph and John Lovewell, then boys of nine or ten, went hunting one winter day and came upon Jonas in the woods above Dick Rowland's place. There he had withdrawn from the haunts of men and burrowed himself a cave in a bank. He had his gun, a cache of potatoes and a couch of hemlock boughs.

His brother, Manse, took Jonas home and cared for him until he died shortly after.

Corinth Brothers

Two brothers lived in Corinth. One of them, a clerk in the local store, was a very religious man, attended church regularly, taught Sunday School Class and was an exemplary character in every way. The other one was a blacksmith and the exact opposite of his brother. One day in his shop a customer remarked about the difference between them. "Yes," Frank said, "Fred prays a lot and I swear a lot, but don't either one of us mean anything by it."

A Doctor's Complaints

Excerpts from a letter to Henry Cooke, Corinth, Vermont, December 14, 1839 from his brother-in-law, Dr. Alvah Carpenter, who was spending the winter in Boston, Massachusetts:

"My wife has been quite sick, I was fearful she would have Lung Fever as she had a very tedious coughing for a number of days. The smallpox is still prevailing here and producing a great deal of excitement. It is common opinion that it will go through the City and all those who can have it, will. The city has prepared a hospital for the Poor to resort to, to be taken care of. The part of the city that I am in is thick enough with it, one case across the street and probably 50 or 60 cases within 50 rods of me. I thought I would leave but my family has not been well enough to take such a journey.

"The smallpox and money business make it wretched times here in Boston. People say they never knew the like before. Provisions of all kinds are unusually low (in price), otherwise a great many poor people here would hardly get their dinner.

"In their Elections they have been wide awake on both sides. It is expected the Democratic party has carried the state, the Whigs the city offices. They insisted upon my voting which I refused. They came 2 and 3 at a time, several times during the day, declaring I should vote. They offered to procure a carriage of any description to carry and fetch me, but no go!

"You mention there is little money paid in. Has Wesley Wilson taken up his note, and Moses Sawyer? Has Nathaniel Avery paid part or all, and many others of long standing? The Lord knows who! If not done, I shall raise the D---l with some of them when I come. I am determined to have my pill business settled up in that place. Those who are determined not to pay, if any, but wait for me to lengthen out the chain, will find I do not calculate to eternally promise and never fulfill.

"You tell that Converse is with you in the store. Ask him which he had rather do, measure tape or deal out paregoric. If he wishes to speculate at the auctions in Boston, there is much better chance now than when he was here buying."

Catching A Thief

Ebenezer Humphrey, a Corinth farmer once found that someone had stolen all his salt pork from the cellar.

He and his wife had suspicions as to the thief's identity. "Let's not mention it to a soul. It may be the best way to find out," they agreed. A while later one of the neighbors stopped by. After talking a few minutes he said, "Mr. Humphrey, did ye ever find out who stole your pork?" "Not 'till jest now," was the reply.

Astronomy Study From Taplin Hill

In the early days of Corinth two farmers were visiting after chores, as neighbors often did. They watched the full moon rising slowly over the hills before them.

Finally after an awed silence, the first farmer cleared his throat and said, "Look's as big as a plate don't it?"

Thinking for a spell the other farmer answered, "Wal, prob'ly if you was right up thar where 'tis, t'would be as big as a cart wheel."

A Chronic Invalid

in the house now owned by the Hugh Olsens just north of the present library.

Loutheria considered herself an invalid and was always "ailin." She would sit by the hour holding onto her neck with her left hand, her head in her right hand. She supposedly never left her invalid's chair or couch without help. But one day the hired maid had put a batch of apple pies in the oven to bake and went to the garden to fetch vegetables for a boiled dinner. After quite a spell Loutheria thought she smelled those pies a-burning, so she arose stealthily, quietly opened the oven door and peeked in. The pies were baking nicely, so as quietly as before she went back to her chair. In the meantime the hired girl had come into the backroom and had seen everything. The girl didn't make her presence known and Loutheria lived out her days blissfully unaware that everyone knew her secret.

Frequently Loutheria wrote letters to her Doctor in Concord, always starting them, "Dear Doctor, I think I need a tonic."

Although she was "physically ailin" all the time, she was mentally alert and watched the hired girl like a hawk. She was meticulously neat, and required the girl to put pins in the corner of the tablecloth when she shook it after meals, to be sure the corners would be exactly even when she put it back on the table.

When Edwin and Loutheria moved to the residence now owned by Lloyd Sweet, Loutheria rode majestically on her couch in an express wagon.

A Secret Room in Corinth

During the Civil War one of the Underground Stations for slaves escaping from the South to Canada was located in a house built by Richard Rowland. The same house still stands up the road from the old Rowland Day place.

The slaves were surreptiously hurried upstairs to a secret room. To reach it, one entered a large bedroom with an open cupboard with many shelves on an inside wall. A strong push on the back wall of the cupboard swung it back like a door, leaving the shelves stationary except for the bottom one which was removable. Through this opening the slaves crawled to the temporary safety of the small windowless room, pushing the wall of the cupboard back into place. Then Richard would replace the bottom shelf, piling shoes and other articles thereon for camouflage.

When all danger was past, the slaves were sent toward Canada, afoot or by wagon, in the dark of night.

Let Us Eat

When Mansfield Taplin ran the grist mill at Cookeville he invited the minister to supper one night. After they were seated at the table Manse said,

"I blessed all this stuff when I brought it into the house but if that ain't enough you can do it again."

Village Blacksmith

The following stories are told of Madison Doe, who had a blacksmith shop near Cookeville many years ago.

The parson at Cookeville was having his horse shod and asked that Madison figure up his bill for the past year. Madison informed him that the amount was small since there had been some credits. "That can't be," the parson pointed out, "I haven't paid you at all." "While you were waiting for your work to be done," explained Madison, "you went in the house to see the women folks. While you were there you used to offer prayer. Each time you offered prayer I credited you fifty cents on your blacksmith bill." "Oh," exclaimed the parson, "If I'd known that I'd have prayed out the whole of your bill."

Doe was a skilled blacksmith and during his spare time he bored out a piece of steel for the barrel of a gun, made a stock etc. When the gun was done he loaded it. Turning to a neighbor who was standing near the door of the shop, Doe said, "How much will you charge me if I fire at one of your turkeys over there in the field?" "Fire away," said the neighbor. Doe fired and killed a turkey, then began to load his gun to fire again. "That will do," said the neighbor, in haste. "You may have that turkey if you won't fire again."

Daniel Flagg — Inventor

Daniel Flagg, native inventor and philosopher of sorts, was born in Corinth in 1793. He was a nonconformist and deemed eccentric. He opposed the slaughtering of animals to obtain hides and so went barefoot rather than wear footgear made of leather. In the winter he wore rubbers, but many a cold morning he wandered with feet a reddish tinge. He dreamed up a poem which expressed his thoughts on the use of tobacco.

Tobacco is an Indian weed,
And from the Devil it did proceed
It picks your pockets
And burns your clothes
And makes a chimney of your nose

In 1815 he married a Corinth widow, Clarinda Carter, by whom he had several children.

They lived on Robie Hill and here in his workshop Daniel spent most of his time inventing and tinkering. He invented what was probably the first crude shower bath in town. It was composed of pump logs coming directly from a spring on top of Robie Hill to a barrel in his yard. The spray was controlled by a wooden spigot. Every morning Daniel would run outside naked, jump into his barrel and have a shower.

He worried considerably about locomotives running into animals and people and went to work on a cow-catcher, drawing up his plans in detail.

Daniel had a friend who often came to the shop to watch him work on this device. When the model was finished, the friend disappeared. He had copied Daniel's plans, hired a horse, and gone to Washington, D. C. where he patented the cow-catcher in his own name.

When Daniel learned of his friend's perfidy, he took his own plans and marched barefoot to Washington. The patent officials were convinced that Daniel's plans were the original ones but could do nothing. They compromised as best they could and the railroads issued him a pass to ride trains at will for the rest of his life.

Daniel returned home crushed and discouraged. He became increasingly eccentric and after many quarrels his wife left him. For a time thereafter Daniel lived with his sister, Polly Robie. As he grew older much of his time was spent riding trains and living like a tramp along the way. Daniel died in Franklin, New Hampshire and is buried in the old Pembroke cemetery.

The Moonlight Sap Gatherer

On the old Slack farm on a hill in South Corinth lived sixteen-year-old Bert Slack. In the spring he "hired out for sugaring" to Fred Eaton of Corinth Corner. Eaton lived on the place now occupied by Joe Sarazin.

Fred was a hard taskmaster, at least Bert thought so. After Bert had worked all day Fred would send him to gather sap in the moonlight. "By crackey," said Fred, "I want my hired man to earn his board and keep." Walking on the crusty snow, a sap yoke on his shoulders, Bert tramped through the sugar place gathering sap. Often he had to break the ice before he could pour the sap from the bucket into his gathering pails. Meanwhile Fred's oxen were comfortably chewing their cuds in the warm barn. At the end of one week, Bert quit his job with this remark, "By Crackey, I don' mind earning my own board and keep but I'll be darned if I'll earn the oxen's too."

An East Corinth Ode
By a Cynical Resident
(Published in 1895)

Beside the fair Waits River,
For one hundred years or more
Has stood the grand old village
So famed in historic lore.

Near the village, on the east side,
Old Sleeper's hill looks down,
And McArthur peaks on the west side
Return their neighbor's frown.

It is noted for its fiction
Which from certain mouths flies out,
And it makes but little difference
Whom the stories are about.

It has all kinds of people,
Young and old, large and small,
But each individual's business
Is made common by them all.

Each month as the moon fulls
It sees a gathering grand
Of the fair and happy ladies
In this fair and happy land.

We've a Meetinghouse and schoolhouse,
Common property for all,
Though the worshippers say different
Which makes a continuous squall.

Near the Center of the village
The old "Brick House" proudly stands;
Once a residence, now a tavern
With its ever-changing bands.

We also have mechanics
Who with Edison dispute for fame,
Statesmen, farmers, tramps and loafers,
Far too numerous to name.

It also has a physician
Who all diseases likes to try,
Miners, fools and scandal-mongers
Who are very fond of lies.

In summer it has boarders
Who escape the city glare
To whiten by songs and shooting
Their unlucky neighbor's hair.

Now will end my story,
Of this place you may take heed,
For in the ranks of glory
East Corinth takes the lead.

Here And There In East Corinth

Carrie Clark, a graduate of Oberlin College, conducted a successful private school in the 1890's in the house where the Clifford Johnson family now lives. She taught Latin, Algebra and other academic subjects.

Edson Rowland's first store was in the old house on the west side of the road now owned by Vetha Holland. The building served at various times as a dwelling house, tin shop and post office. It was originally occupied in the 1820's by Nancy Corliss, widow of John and ancestress of Vetha.

When Charlie Page was a boy in the 1880's the Post Office was in the Robert Fulton house, now the John William's house. Charlie remembered the stagecoach that came to East Corinth, then the mail center.

Green Mountain Liniment and Elixir

In later years John Merrill sold his store to Arad Corliss who in turn sold it to Horace Blood.

Horace, a quiet, meek man moved in and started making and selling "Green Mountain Liniment and Elixir" which was supposed to cure a multitude of ills. This venture proving unsuccessful he converted it to a general store, giving up his dreams of "getting rich quick." The building burned in 1913.

Susan's Handwarmers

Sometime before 1850 a family named Farr lived in the house where the Wayland Jordans now live. The Farrs had a daughter, Susan, who later married Daniel Corliss and lived near East Corinth. This is the story of an incident that occurred when Susan was sixteen.

One bitter-cold day in winter a relative came from some distance to get Susan to return with him to care for his sick wife. Susan and her mother bustled about making preparations for the trip. Susan put on her heavy woolen coat and hood, over them wrapped a big woolen shawl and climbed into the sleigh. Her mother placed a heated freestone at her feet, and tucked in the fur robe. At the last moment she placed in Susan's mittened hands two hot potatoes which she had raked from the ashes of the fireplace, saying "Here Sukie, take these 'taters, they'll keep yer hands warm."

Three hours later on arrival at the home of the sick relative, Susan and the potatoes were still warm.

Ox Team From Boston

At one time there was a big house where Kenneth Thompson's trailer is now located. The pioneer family of Daniel Corliss lived there. Among his sons was Daniel, Jr. whom Aunt Cathy Thompson knew in the 1890's. By that time Daniel Jr. was an old man, Aunt Cathy in her early teens.

Daniel told Cathy of the ox team that used to go to Boston to bring back newspapers and supplies for the store keepers in East Corinth. Folks often sent by the driver for special goods from Boston.

The return route came over Muzzey Hill, and when he reached the top the driver would blow a horn if he had brought anything for the Corliss family. Little Dan would run to meet him at the bottom of the hill. These were momentous days for little Dan.

The Finnish Colony of Corinth

The Finnish people who eventually settled in Corinth migrated from their native land in the early years of the 20th Century to New York City where they yearned for the opportunity to till the soil and raise their families in a country environment. The majority of them knew each other before Ilmari and Selma Salomaa made the first break when they decided in 1919 to purchase a farm on Pike Hill instead of Canada which they had considered. Practically all of them could speak English and had no difficulty conversing with the Corinthians.

In 1922 they were joined by her sister and family, Fred and Lydia Antilla, son John and daughter Emmie. By 1932 the colony included the families of Felix and Amanda Takala, Eino and Etla Williamson, Hilma Hakenson, Karl and Emma Nykanen, Joseph and Lydia Gandy, George and Lizzie Forsman. This same year other Finnish families located on Turkey or Dearborn Hill: Hugo and Selma Calenius, Eino and Gertrude Calenius, August and Lydia Jauhola.

In 1942 the Pike Hill colony was increased by the arrival of Charles and Anna Kallberg who were joined ten years later by her niece and family, Unto and Heila Hallonen, who came directly from Finland and resided with them for a short time. Carl and Mary Carlson bought the Hakanen farm this same year while Theodore and Irene Salomaa moved on to the farm adjoining Kallberg's. Sven and Aili Hansen arrived from New York City in 1947 to live with her parents, Felix and Anna Takala. For many years Armas and Lily Walleman owned a summer home on Pike Hill.

The Finnish men were skilled carpenters and dairy farmers who improved and expanded the farms of earlier Yankee owners. Their wives were excellent cooks and homemakers who took pride in the neatness of their homes and property. At first they clung together, enjoying many parties with accordian music for the Polka and Schottische which were their favorite dances. A great quantity of coffee and coffee cake was always served at these affairs.

The colony became noted for their Saunas or steam baths, the Salomaa family being the first to build one, followed by the Takalas and other Finnish families. Many times friends and neighbors were invited to share the novelty of a Sauna.

A Sauna contains two small rooms, one for dressing and the other for bathing. In the bathing room is found a firebox of stones or bricks, and a chimney. Steam is produced by pouring water on the heated stones atop the firebox. Three benches of ascending height allow the bather a preference in temperature according to what he can stand, the higher he sits the higher the temperature. A bundle of birch branches are used to whisk the body to open the pores to the steam. After steaming from 15 minutes to one hour, perspiration washes away all impurities of the skin, and even better, helps to reduce excess poundage. A wash cloth, soap and warm water are then used for a sponge bath, followed by a pail of water, usually warm, for rinsing. No one will argue the point that the Sauna is the cleanest form of bathing, giving one a sense of well-being and vigor.

Some years ago the Kallberg farm, and the Johansen house where chickens were raised on the property, were destroyed by fire, the Johansen girls living with the Gandy family for several years.

The Finnish people, all loyal Americans, are industrious, contributing of their time and talent to the welfare of town, church and school. It was Corinth's gain when they chose the green hills of Vermont to start a new life. (Above information supplied by Mrs. Theodore Salomaa. Very few of the original families are now living in town.)

Mandy At The Fair

Years ago when the East Corinth Fair was flourishing a crowd of people were listening to a barker advertise his show. He spoke in sonorous tones, all the while pulling a string back and forth through a hole in his nose. At the climax of his speech he called, "Come right up ladies. My mother was a lady." "Wal," snorted Mandy, "If she was I'd think she'd be ashamed of you."

Daniel's First Day At School

Five-year-old Daniel Corliss refused to stay at school his first day. "Ain't no teacher there," he explained to his mother, "Nobody but Lon an' he ain't no teacher." Lon was one of Daniel's older brothers who was schoolmaster that term.

Corinth Civil War Hero

George Prescott of Page Hill, where Tom Sayles now resides, served in the Civil War in Co. G 9th Vt. Regiment.

He volunteered to serve for his country and was pronounced the best soldier in his Brigade. When reminiscing about the war he always ended his stories by saying, "Somebody will have to answer for the wickedness of wars."

Under Fire In Peace and War

Henry Jackman, grandson of Abel and a typical Yankee of few words, backed up against a stove in his bobbin mill one cold wintry morning in 1900, scorching the tails of his broadcloth frock-coat. One of his workmen passing by the door exclaimed, "Mr. Jackman, your coat is burning!" The elderly gentleman replied, "That's my business."

He wasn't as crusty as he sounded as he was a doting father to the three sons and one daughter born after he reached middle-age. On rare occasions he would entertain them with stories of the Civil War in which he served as quarter-master for four years and four days, joining the 2nd Massachusetts Light Battery after he disposed of a lucrative teamster business in Boston.

The battery was first stationed at Baltimore where they received as many boos as cheers from the divided populace whose sympathies were split between the North and the South. They were sent to Fortress Monroe where they witnessed the battle between the Monitor and the Merrimac, the first iron-clad ships of war.

From there they went to Ship Island and New Orleans with Gen. Butler's expedition and were present at Farragut's first attempt to capture Vicksburg. After participation in almost all the battles and expeditions in the Gulf area, including the successful attack on Mobile, they went on to Montgomery and then Vicksburg where they remained until the end of the war. In later years at reunions of the famous battery, his commander said, "He was a good soldier, one of my best."

Uncle William The Conqueror

In 1803 the inhabitants of the southern part of Corinth had trouble with the town of Vershire over the boundary lines between the two towns.

Vershire persuaded the General Assembly to pass an act granting it full rights to a mile-wide strip off the south side of Corinth.

Soon after, the Vershiremen sent their surveyors, chainmen and axemen to survey and distribute lots on the newly-acquired land at the Corner.

But the Vershirites hadn't reckoned on an encounter with Uncle William Fellows. Seated on his horse, Old Walleye, and armed with a good "Birch Seal" (switch) Uncle William charged the trespassers. They were no match for the redoubtable old gentleman and his steed and retreated protesting from his premises.

Post Road Tragedy

Miss Alvira Dow died in East Corinth March 23, 1900 at nearly 90 years of age, having lived in this village all her life. Her death recalled a tragedy of her childhood.

Alvira's parents started on a trip "down country" leaving their two small children with a lady well remembered by the older people as Aunt Sam Corliss.

The travellers never returned. Communications then were poor and what befell them will never be known. They were good parents and it is unlikely that they would have deserted their small children. It seems probable that they were victims of some dark deed in a tavern on the Boston Stage Road. In those days it was not uncommon for wayfarers to meet with such a fate.

Aunt Sam cared for the children until they reached maturity.

Alvira became a fine tailoress, going from house to house as her services were needed, and from her earnings acquired a tidy sum. In later years she kept house for Charles Stevens on what is now the Frank Emerson place.

A Promise Taken In Trade

There is a region beyond the environs of West Corinth where once upon a time a dozen or more farms were located, all gone today. On one of these farms lived Jim Ford, a lackadaisical farmer, and his poor but resourceful wife. One morning they set out in their old farm wagon drawn by two work-worn horses, bound for Chelsea. They were in desperate need of a new stove as their old one was actually falling apart.

Upon arrival in Chelsea they went directly to Tracy's Hardware Store to look at kitchen stoves. Mr. Tracy was in a trading mood and stood around beaming while the couple carefully examined each stove on display. He was very cooperative when they asked numerous questions regarding the merits of each cook stove.

After much deliberation Mrs. Ford turned to her husband and said, "Now Jim we've looked at Mr. Tracy's stoves. Let's go home and think it over, and when we sell that pair of oxen we'll come back and buy one of these stoves."

Oscar Tracy's salesmanship got the better of him after hearing the conversation and he decided to sell them a stove that very day. Approaching the Fords he said, "Now don't worry about the money. I'll sell you a stove on credit against the day you sell your oxen." The Fords went back to The Borough with one of Oscar's finest stoves in their wagon, and that was the last he saw of the couple or the stove.

An Ancient "Whodunit"

There are many variations of this story but the oldest and least exaggerated concerns a young lady who was burned to death in a log cabin located on the site of the James Sargent farmhouse today. The men folk were working in nearby fields when they noticed the blaze. By the time they reached the scene the roof had fallen in, and helplessly they stood by until the embers cooled before searching the ruins. A great pile of wheat stored in the overhead loft had fallen on the body, thus saving it from destruction by the flames. To their horror they found that the girl had been slain with an axe before the cabin was deliberately fired to hide the crime. Gold pieces, which were rumored to be hidden under the hearthstone, had disappeared.

Their suspicions immediately turned to a family who lived a few miles away on the present William Devins farm but nothing was ever proved against them, nor was the gold found. The name "Bowen" has been given to the victim by some, while others claim that was the name of her murderers.

For years fortune hunters searched for the treasure, some positive it had been buried at the foot of a tree overhanging the brook in back of the Devins farm. Not too many years ago a party of men, led by a native of Corinth, asked permission of Bill Devins to dig ginseng root on his land. When their search was directed to the back of the barn a few days later, Bill's suspicions were aroused and he informed them they had better leave. Sheepishly they admitted that they were searching for the gold that was buried on his land years ago. To this day it has never been found.

Water Boy

Eighty-four years ago the Methodist Church in East Corinth was no longer used as a church and a group of local carpenters were hired to move it to the farm now occupied by Henry Metcalf for use as a barn.

George Merritt, then a young boy, carried drinking water by the pail and dipper method to the men. This job gave George a chance to watch the excitement, as well as to make himself useful.

A Loyal Citizen

Charles Jewell, a farmer, lived in East Corinth over 60 years ago.

It happened that one day in 1899 he had driven his team to Bradford for commodities for the farm. He was all loaded for the trip back home and was "passin the time of day" with some acquaintances on the street when someone shouted 'The Saginaw House in East Corinth is on fire."

The resourceful Charles waited for no one. He unhitched his horses from their wagon, ran them to the fire house and hitched them to the Bradford fire engine. Mounting the driver's seat, he drove at a gallop all the way to East Corinth to help put out the fire.

Though they were too late to save the Saginaw House, the bedraggled horses and their valiant driver had shown the spirit of loyalty for their home town.

Successful Pack Peddlars

When visiting her grandparents on their farm little Mary Rowland amused herself by becoming interested in everything going on about her. Unlike today, a child could always be happy at play without suggestions from her elders on "what to do next." She was watching the road from her grandmother's porch one day, hoping to see some one she knew passing by, when she spied two young lads coming up the road, each carrying strange packs on their backs. Mary was very curious and began asking her grandmother endless questions as to the whys and wherefores of pack peddlers whom she had never seen before in her young life.

When they came to the door her grandmother asked the young men in. They could understand very little English and kept saying over and over, "Only three weeks from Shermany." Their names were Abe Jacobs and Max Kaufman.

The heavy packs were filled with many useful things like pencils, combs, handkerchiefs and hose for men, women and children, hairpins, towels, needles and pins. Mary's grandmother bought a number of items, among them a pair of stockings for Mary. They were brown with circling white stripes and Mary was bursting with pride as she had never worn anything but solid-color home-knit hose. She never forgot the experience, nor the young men whom she was to hear more of as the years passed.

Abe Jacobs was only fifteen when he first came to Corinth, and Max was near the same age. Abe got caught in one of the economic pitfalls confronting young men when his business increased to the point where he decided he needed a horse and cart. He traded his pack for a horse but had no goods to sell. His brother Simon heard of his predicament and brought him to Lebanon, New Hampshire to live with him, sending Abe to school to learn English. As soon as his education was completed Abe immediately returned to Corinth, purchased a horse and cart, and sold goods around the area. He was a hard worker and every business venture he attempted was successful.

Abe used to say he had some "downs" along with the "ups," especially as a horse trader. Actually he often outsmarted the best of his opponents as happened one bright morning when Abe and a trader friend dickered for hours before coming to terms on a horse deal. The trader was about to leave when he turned and handed Abe a bottle of horse medicine, saying with a twinkle in his eye, "Better take this, ye may need it." Abe replied, "Wait a minute. You'd better take half of it." He fetched another bottle, poured half the medicine into it and handed it to the trader, chuckling as he led his new horse into the barn.

The urge to trade got the better of Abe one time and he found himself without any horses in the barn. When his wife wondered about the unusual situation he told her the horses had fallen through the scuttlehole.

Horse trading was only a side line with Abe as he ran a store at Cookeville for years and operated a large farm nearby until failing health forced him to retire. Both he and his wife went to a rest home in Ludlow where Abe died on February 18, 1963 at the age of 93.

Little is known of Max Kaufman's activities after he sold his clothing store in Cookeville and moved to New York City years ago, returning only once to visit Abe. But both the young German immigrants who came to Corinth as pack peddlers became successful men, and there was no more loyal citizen than Abe Jacobs who adopted Corinth as his home town.

"As The Twig Is Bent"

Samuel Haseltine was one of the early settlers of Corinth to locate at the Center. He did more for the advancement of morality and Christianity than any other man of his time, conducting religious meetings on the Sabbath until the church was built.

His son, Samuel, Jr. inherited his father's civic interests as well as his Christian principles, and was always constant in his attendance at church, so much so that even his dumb animals seemed to know when it was time for church. The old family horse, tired of waiting for the family one Sunday morning, proceeded to church and went to the shed where he usually stood during the service. It was also related that his faithful dog went to church alone one Sabbath day.

Samuel, Jr. was very benevolent and gave freely of his money and worldly goods to the church. On one occasion when the church lacked wood for the fire, a parishioner was asked to furnish some. He loudly exclaimed, "Let Squire Haseltine get the wood, he always does."

While serving as assistant town clerk to his father, and during his tenure of office in that capacity after his father's death, he united more couples in marriage than any other person in town.

McDuffee

Horace McDuffee was a native of Bradford, an engineer and graduate of Dartmouth College.

He was middle-aged when he moved to East Corinth where until 1894 he owned and operated a successful saw mill on the land now owned by the Jackman Company.

He lived a solitary life in the basement of the present Harold Chase house where he had three stoves lined up in a row, all of which were kept burning. Folks thought he was "a mite peculiar."

McDuffee admired his brother who was a large man. "McDuff" himself was small and thin and wore his overalls in layers to make him appear larger. The outer garment would never quite button and was fastened with horse blanket pins. He was proud of his appearance and had his picture taken to send to Sears Roebuck. He always carried a cane and when he ventured out in winter always wore his scarf. The scarf was a chenille portiere which he wound several times about his neck and shoulders, the fringed end hanging down his back.

Except for Elbridge Sawyer, who lived on the present Leland Everett place, McDuffee counted few as friends. They made a strange pair as they raced through the village streets behind Sawyer's horse, Billy, Elbridge showing off the Morgan's paces like a school boy while McDuffee sat in silent disapproval.

One time "McDuff" failed to appear about the village for several days. Villagers were concerned but hesitated to intrude upon his privacy. Kenneth Butler and Charlie Fox, both youngsters of a tender age, took it upon themselves to investigate. They crept quietly to the door where they were confronted by the angry McDuff. Kenneth was too frightened to speak but Charlie, a little older and braver, quavered, "We thought you might be sick and need help." McDuff pointed his cane at Charlie and roared. "If I'm ever sick I'll send for ye."

A Few Pounds Of Silver

Mrs. Samuel Corliss' husband was one of the early settlers of Corinth, coming here from Haverhill, Massachusetts. Her maiden name was Hannah Silver. When she was an elderly widow the tax collector called on her. She asked, "Do you take silver for taxes?" He replied that he did. "All right," she chortled, "take my arm, it's all Silver."

Iowa Territory

Excerpts from a letter sent from Iowa Territory, December 29, 1842 by Nicholas Scribner to his father, Benjamin Scribner, Corinth East Village. The letter is in the possession of Benjamin's great grandson, Eugene Eastman:

"I left Ohio on the 11th day of October and arrived here in 22 days, about 600 miles. We had good luck and a pleasant journey. We crossed Wabause (Wabash) River at Attica, forded it, Illinois River at Peoria (ferry), the Mississippi at Burlington (steam ferry) before landing in Iowa.

I traded my Ohio farm for land here and found things as recommended. I am now 50 miles west of the Mississippi, 6 miles east of the Indian boundary. Next spring I intend to take up a claim on the New Purchase. The territory is getting full of people waiting for the Purchase to open up. There is an army of soldiers on the line to keep people back until spring.

Indiany I don't think much of as a state although there is some good land. The east side is heavily timbered, cold too and wet. There are some good prairies on the west side. Illinois is a fine state, high rolling prairies in some places, large timber, and water scarce in others.

The soil is good here, prairies smoother than in Illinois, timber, enough water, and best of all it is healthy country. There has been some good sleighing here for 4 or 5 weeks, snow 6 inches deep on the prairies and ground frozen 2 to 3 inches deep. The Dessamoin (Des Moines) River is about 40 rods wide and very smooth bottom, no rapids. At high water steamboats can run up 300 miles, flat bottom boats run any time. People generally plow here with 4 yoke of oxen, soil very rich and produces great crops. It is rich, light and black, good for all kinds of grain, 40 bushels of wheat to an acre. A plow turns 22 inches (of soil), averaging 2 acres per day.

There are plenty of fish in the river, our first victuals in this place were fish, as good as I've ever eaten; 640 were caught in one haul. There are some deer, turkeys, and many prairie hens, a great many plums, red and white, that grow very large, and plenty of apples, tame, and some peaches. Free stone in the quarries and stone coat.

I turned in my stock and what things I had to spare to good advantage as I could not sell them for much money because of hard times: table $5, bedstead $6, light stand $3.50, big chair $3.50. In exchange I had a good wagon built, bought two sets of harness worth $30 each, one burro $18, and the Dewolf horse $60.

"You wanted me to let you know the price of produce. Everything is very low because of hard time, and the country being new people have not started to ship much yet. By the bushel, wheat in cash, 31¢, potatoes 12½¢, corn 12¢; by the bushel in trade, wheat 50¢, corn 20¢, potatoes 20¢. Wheat can be shipped to New York from here by way of (New) Orleans for 25¢ per bushel, flour 90¢ per barrel. Butter and cheese are worth 10¢ per pound.

There are good mill privileges on the Dessamoin, about 15 miles apart, already 6 gristmills, 4 sawmills, one carding and clothdressing mill, and a number going up next summer.

"Iowa City is the seat of government 70 miles north of here on the Iowa River. Three years ago no white men there, now there are 1500 inhabitants. They have a fine state house finished.

"Direct your letters to Portland, Van Buren County, Iowa Territory. "Post Script: (from daughter-in-law, Nancy B. Scribner). Nicholas has not said anything about me and the children, Sarah Jane and Hale often talk about you all. I have three little boys now, one was 8 weeks old the day we started from Ohio. He stood the journey well, and we slept in our wagon every night but 5.

"Oh how I want to see you all. I do not think I shall this side of Eternity (she didn't), but let us try to be good and we shall be happy, meeting where parting is no more. As it is my lot to be moving all over the world, may I be contented and feel it is right. I am in a strange land among strange people but God has ever been my friend. I trust he will not leave me now, nor forsake me."

Share and Share Alike

The early settlers of Corinth truly loved their neighbors, sharing their bounty with the less fortunate. One exception was a family noted for their lack of "the milk of human kindness." They had planted an orchard very early and were the first in a certain part of town to reap a crop of apples. They also built a "cyder" mill to make the first cider in town.

One season they stored their abundant apple crop in an outbuilding, making it secure with nails and extra boards. A sick woman in the neighborhood craved some apples but the family would neither sell nor give any away.

The enraged inhabitants decided to take things into their own hands. They met at a nearby neighbor and proceeded to the farm where the apples were hoarded. One man pried the boards apart with an axe and the others caught the apples as they rolled out in sufficient quantity to fill two large bags, one for the sick woman and the other to be divided among the raiders.

Barn Raising

The late George Richardson used to tell a story about a barn raising he went to when he was a young lad. When the frame of the barn was up, one of the workers who evidently had his share of the spirituous refreshments on hand, climbed up on the frame and harangued his fellow- workers as follows:

This is a good frame in a very good spot,
God bless the owner and all he has got.
The sills are square and the posts they are plumb,
And all we want is a little more Rum.

Pent Road Gates Were Made For Closing

About five miles from Chelsea on the Washington-Corinth road a young lad by the name of Sleeper was returning late at night to his home, the old Manasseh Sleeper place at the Corner. This highway was an early Pent Road with gates placed at intervals along the way to keep cattle from straying. Sleeper was a good-hearted lad but irresponsible in that he often forgot to close the gates as he passed through, to the annoyance of farmers on the road. One of them decided to teach the lad a lesson he'd never forget, and in this regard he was most successful.

As young Sleeper neared the last gate leading into Corinth Corner he glanced up into a tree and saw what he thought to be a man hanging among the branches. Very frightened he rushed to the nearest farmhouse where he aroused a reluctant father and brothers from their much-needed rest. Thinking that a tragedy had occurred in the neighborhood, they hastened to the gate. Checking carefully they found the man to be only a scarecrow stuffed with hay. Upon the effigy was a crude sign which read, "I WAS HANGED FOR NOT SHUTTING THE GATE!"

Longevity Of Susannah Brown

Susannah Brown and her husband, Daniel, of Thornton, New Hampshire, moved to Corinth by ox-team in March of 1787 when the snow was four feet deep. Their farm of 67 acres was a wilderness except for a small cleared patch containing a log cabin without chimney, a dirt floor, and roof of bark. When the snow began to melt the bark roof leaked, dripping water colored with soot and smoke to add to their discomfort. Less than two years later their humble home burned while Mrs. Brown and two of her children were doing the weekly wash at the great brook.

Shortly after this Daniel died and Mrs. Brown was left with six children to care for, one of them a baby. She took over the work of her husband, along with her own duties, with great courage and perseverance. She would take the axe into the woods through the deep snows and chop her own wood, often working until her clothes were frozen to her body. The children, the oldest of whom was 12, assisted her with farm chores which gave them a maturity beyond their years.

Susannah was never too busy to give help or sympathy to her neighbors, and served as nurse for everyone in the community. She had excellent health and was never sick a day in her life except at the birth of her children.

At the age of 98 she was still vigorous and retained her mental and physical powers to a remarkable degree. Although living with her son she stubbornly insisted on bringing in her own wood, lighting her fire, doing her own washing and carding wool. She died March 30, 1867 at the age of 99 years, 10 months and 12 days, beloved by all who were familiar with the hardships and trials endured without complaint by this sturdy pioneer.

Lemonade, Or Burn!

Long ago the George Heath family lived near the present Pearl McCrillis farm in Southwest Corinth. There is now a camp on the old Heath place which burned years earlier.

The family attended many Holiness Meetings at the Corner Methodist Church where the Rev. Mr. Taylor was a visiting evangelist. Shortly after one of these revivals Mrs. Heath, whose first name was Fidelia, became quite ill and was delirious. She wanted lemonade to quench her thirst and begged her husband to buy some lemons. Being a tight-fisted farmer, George refused to buy the lemons as they were very "dear" in those days.

Enraged at his refusal, Fidelia raved to a neighbor, "I wish Elder Taylor would come back and hold George over Hell a few minutes so he could see himself as others see him." So far as known, George remained cool, unscorched and stingy.

Frugality To The Last Drop

A young lad in town was helping his neighbor gather sap on a bright snappy morning in early spring. Horrified he called out, "Oh, Mr. Fellows, there's a dead mouse in this bucket."

The old man who was noted for his stinginess replied, "Hold it up, boy, and let it 'dreep' good before you throw it out so's not to waste any sap."

Remedies of Old Corinth

Onion Syrup: Slice fine two or three large onions. Cook in oven with one cup of honey and ½ cup of hot water. This makes excellent cough syrup.

Catnip Tea: Pour boiling water over catnip leaves and blossoms, steep well. This drink will cure mild colds and makes a soothing drink before going to bed. Sweetening makes this drink more palatable.

Sore Throat Remedy: Slice off a good-sized piece of salt pork, sprinkle well with pepper. Apply pork to throat, binding it on throat with a clean cloth. Wear until sore throat is relieved.

Onion Poultice: To break up an annoying, on-coming cold fry onions in skunk's oil, put them in a flannel or cheese cloth bag. Apply this poultice to your chest for a short time. It may be "hot" but is guaranteed to break up a cold.

Recipes

Preserving Sausage

Caring for and preserving meat was a major task of all early Corinthians, and preserving sausage was no mean job.

First the sliced sausage was put in a large iron pan to fry. When partly cooked, the fat was drained off in a pail. Next the sausage was put into an air-tight bucket and covered with melted lard. When it was cool the bucket was placed in the cold cellar.

After the sausage was all used up, the lard had to be clarified. Equal amounts of water and lard were boiled together. The lard would come to the top. This purified lard could easily be removed when it was cold. If the meat taste still lingered in the lard, it would be heated again and clarified by cooking raw potatoes in it.

Old Fashioned French Bread

1 cup potato yeast (1 pkg. dry yeast - for present cooks)

½ tsp. sugar - Dissolve all in ¼ cup luke warm water, let it set 10 minutes

Beat up one egg and add:

1 cup cottage cheese - 2 tbsp. sugar - 1 tbsp. grated onion

1 tbsp. melted butter - 1 tsp salt - ¼ tsp. Arm & Hammer baking soda

Now beat it all together and add the yeast mixture, stir in 2½ to 2¾ cups of flour and knead well, let it rise until double. (It will make one loaf.) After it rises, form into a loaf and place in loaf pan and let rise until double in size and bake in moderate oven for 40 to 50 minutes.

This makes a very good sandwich bread or to eat fresh, but is not good toasted. This recipe was handed down from a relative of Nettie Flanders' mother, Mrs. Jennie McCrillis, who lived on the George Smith place years ago.

How Good Cheese Was Made

Making cheese was only one task among many which kept our Corinth ancestors busy.

First the rennet (the inner lining of a calve's stomach which had been preserved in salt) was brought out from the covered basket in the kitchen cupboard. Then the cheese basket made of thin strips of wood woven in basket pattern and a big wooden tub were placed nearby. When all was ready, a pail of fresh warm milk was fetched from the barn. Pieces of rennet were placed in the milk to curdle it. Next the curdled milk was poured through the cheese basket, which was set on the wooden tub. The plump creamy curds remained in the basket and the whey ran into the tub.

The curds were then salted and made into small cheeses, which were rubbed with butter, covered with cheesecloth and sprinkled with red pepper to keep the flies away. Most of these cheeses were put away to ripen on the buttery shelf.

The curds were delicious eaten fresh and the cheese was very nice after it had ripened.

Aunt Alice Rowland's Gingerbread Cookies

Aunt Alice Rowland lived in the house now occupied by Louis Longo in East Corinth. Her cookie jar was always full of cookies from this recipe, as the school children all knew.

1 cup sugar	4½ cups flour
1 cup shortening	2 teaspoons soda
1 egg	¼ teaspoon salt
1 cup sour milk	1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 cup molasses	½ teaspoon ginger and cloves

Cream sugar and shortening, add egg and liquids, stir well, then add dry ingredients. Roll one-half inch thick, sprinkle slightly with sugar, mark ridges with fork, cut in big squares and bake in moderate oven.

Root Beer

Gather roots of checkerberry plants and ends of birch bushes. Steep with maple sugar to taste. Let work and skim and bottle for a soothing drink when one is exhausted from labors of the day.

Corn Beef

2 oz. of salt peter to 50 lbs. of beef 4 lbs of coarse salt
2 lbs. of sugar

Mix salt, sugar and salt peter - heat - rub beef thoroughly on all sides of every piece. Put in a tub packed close together and place a heavy weight on top. Those who make corn beef this way say it will never spoil.

Oatmeal Drink

This recipe is from the Cookbook of Jennie Eastman, Gene Eastman's mother.

Mix ground oatmeal, water, a small portion of vinegar and maple sugar to taste. Excellent drink for the men when they come in from the hayfield.

Sweet Flag Wafers

Dig sweet flag roots in the Fall when they are fully ripe. Clean, scrape and cut into cross sections about one quarter inch thick. Boil gently in water to cover for several hours, drain and bake with a sprinkling of maple sugar and dry in the sun. These wafers are tasty and satisfying if one has a sweet tooth.

Aunt Susanna Taplin's Recipes

Cracker Pudding

1 Quart milk
4 Crackers rolled (large soup kind)
2 Eggs beaten
½ Cup Sugar
Butter size of walnut
Pinch of salt
Raisins as you like (1 cup is good)

Heat milk, cracker crumbs and raisins all together, then add beaten eggs, sugar and salt. Bake in moderate oven until point of knife comes out clean when inserted in center.

Sauce for Cracker Pudding

1 Cup Sugar
2 Teasp. flour
1 Tblsp. Butter
1 Cup water

Boil until thickened. Add 2 tablespoons orange or lemon juice, or teaspoon vanilla.

Johnny Cake

1 Cup sour milk
½ Teasp. soda
2 Tblsp. Sugar
2 Tblsp. Sour cream or other shortening
⅔ Cup each of cornmeal and flour
1 Scant teasp. salt

Mix and bake in moderate oven.

Baked Indian Pudding

2 Quarts Milk, save out 3 cups, scald remainder ½ Cup sugar
½ Cup molasses
½ Cup cornmeal
2 Eggs
1 Teasp. salt
1 Teasp. cinnamon
1 Teasp. ginger

Beat together sugar and molasses, add other ingredients and mix well. Stir into hot milk, mix well. Let cool a little, pour into greased baking dish. Add ½ reserve milk in zigzag on top. Put in hot oven and cook rapidly until whey starts, about 1 hour. Zigzag remainder of reserve milk on top, and bake slowly another 2 hours. Serve with cream, or butter sauce. Added milk prevents dry top.

Bread Stuffing for Chicken or Turkey

4 Cups stale bread crumbs
1 Cup minced salt pork or ¼ cup butter. Can fry pork cubes until gold
1 Cup minced salt pork or ¼cup butter. Can fry pork cubes until golden brown, adding scraps and fat to bread crumbs, or add raw.
½ Teasp. pepper
1 Teasp. salt
1 Tbsp. minced parsley
½ Teasp. poultry seasoning or ground sage
2 Tbsp. grated or minced onion

For variety add ½ cup minced celery, ½ cup chopped nuts or chopped cooked giblets, or 1 cup minced raw oysters. Mix well. If too dry. add small quantity of water until mixture just holds shape when handful picked up. Better dry than wet.

Cranberry and Apple Relish

1 Cup ground apple
1 Cup ground cranberries
⅔ Cup sugar

Use medium coarse knife of food chopper. Mix ingredients and let stand at least 1 hour before serving. Do not cook. Serves six.

Boiled Indian Pudding

Boiled pudding is exactly the same recipe as Johnny Cake except less salt is used and 2 more tablespoons of sugar added. Dip pudding cloth into greasy water in which the boiled dinner was cooked. Flour cloth on both sides, pour in mixture, tie cloth tightly but not too close to batter in order to allow pudding to expand. Boil 3 hours in stock from boiled dinner as it needs the meat flavor from the stock. If water has to be added, be sure it is boiling. Serve with sweetened cream.

Fried Onions and Apples

Fry a few pieces of salt pork until fat is out. Remove pieces from pan. Core mild sour apples sliced across, put slices into frying pan with a little water. Lay on thickly sliced onions, half as much onion as apple. Cover and cook until tender. Takes only a few minutes.

Chicken Pie

Line 10-quart tin pan with rich biscuit dough, rolled ¾" thick, along sides but not bottom. Fill with boiled, seasoned and boned chicken. Pour in 2 cups chicken gravy over top of meat. Cover whole top with rolled dough with a big slit in middle. This opening will not close if breast-bone of chicken is inserted in opening to allow crust to bake without being doughy. Bake 1½ hours in moderate oven or until done. Serve with gravy.

Susanna's Pie Crust

10	Pounds pastry flour	15	Tsps. salt
15	Tsps. baking powder	5	Pounds lard

Crumb lard into above mixture until mealy. Use as needed. 1 cup pressed down makes 2 average pie crusts. Will keep for weeks in cool place if tightly covered in tin, glass or crockery container.

Blackberry Syrup

(Used by early settlers for summer complaint of children, and mild attacks of cholera morbus)

To 2 quarts blackberry juice, add half an ounce powdered nutmeg, cinnamon and allspice, and a quarter ounce powdered cloves. Boil all together to get the strength of spices and to preserve juice. While hot, add a pint of brandy and sweeten with loaf sugar.

Give a child 2 teaspoons three times a day, and if the disorder is not checked, add to the quantity.

Dutch Oven Pumpkin Pudding

Remove top of pumpkin, scoop out seeds and soft parts. Fill with milk, add sugar to sweeten and season with spices. Replace top and bake slowly until done, 2 to 3 hours at least.

Nellie Monroe's Cracker Mince Pie

(As made by her Great Grandmother Hanson in 1829)

4	or 5 large Montpelier Crackers	½	cup cider vinegar
2	eggs well beaten	1	small piece butter
1	cup West Indies molasses	A	small pinch salt
1	large coffee cup dry maple sugar	A	dash of cinnamon, cloves, nutmeg and allspice to taste.

Roll crackers on board with rolling pin until fine crumbed. Place in sauce pan, add vinegar, molasses, cold water and remainder of ingredients. Stir all together and cook until quite thick. If too thick add a little more water and stir. Set aside and let cool while making crust. If mixture thickens before pouring in crust, add more water to right consistency. Be sure it is sweet enough or it will taste flat. Bake between two crusts in moderate oven about ¾ hour until you are sure the crust is done and has a pleasing appearance. Delicious!

Frozen Foods Of Yester Year

When Susanna Taplin was a young girl on Taplin Hill one hundred years ago, the week before Thanksgiving was a busy one. She told of her aunt making 100 pies, 25 to 30 of mincemeat, one dozen apple, and the others pumpkin or squash, blackberry and custard. All were stored in an unheated room fitted with cupboards and allowed to freeze. Freezing improved the flavor, especially of mince pies. The pies were brought in as needed, apple and mince heating quickly after thawing. Squash, pumpkin and custard were served cold.

Susanna's mother baked her pies in a brick oven which held eight pies, and twice a week she filled the oven. Fire was built on the oven floor and allowed to burn down to glowing coals, then raked out before the pies went in to bake. The door was fastened and by the time the heat was gone the pies were done to perfection. Ginger and cinnamon were used to season pumpkin pies but squash pies were flavored with lemon.

Boiled cider was made in huge brass kettles holding from 8 to 10 gallons each, four or five kettles suspended by chains from a pole supported by forked logs which were high enough to swing the kettles over an outdoor wood fire. On wooden horses nearby was a large barrel of cider to replenish the brass kettles as the cider boiled down. Four barrels of new cider made one barrel of boiled cider.

Cider apple sauce was made in quantities of 10 gallons or more and stored for winter use in large wooden tubs kept in a cool place. When frozen a dish of it was brought out as needed. It was a fine appetizer with baked potatoes and homemade sausage for breakfast.

Maple Hill Farm, where Susanna lived for years with her parents, was famous for its maple sugar, she herself winning acclaim when she became responsible for the production of this confection each spring. For years they made three tons annually from 2100 trees and were the banner sugar makers of Vermont. In 1893 they sent 100 pounds to the World's Fair at Chicago and received a blue ribbon, a bronze medal and a certificate for their sugar, ranking 100 in color and flavor, and 99½ in polarization. Susanna died a spinster in 1937 in her eighty-first year, always proud that she was a direct descendant of Col. John Taplin whose ancestral acres were but a short distance from Maple Hill Farm.

Frugal Ways

Charlotte Rowland of East Corinth bought 4 hair pins when she became old enough to put her hair up and never bought any more, nor lost one.

Mrs. Sloan who lived on the old Frank Bond place in Corinth bought only one paper of common pins in her lifetime and she lived to be 80 years old. In all this time she lost but nine of these pins.

1 ounce of nut galls, preferably from an oak tree

Digest by frequently shaking until sufficient color. Good durable ink. It will bear diluting.

Mrs. Day also made her own brown dye for the menfolk's shirts by steeping butternut shells in water until she got the right shade of brown.

Expressions Of Old Corinth

One old fellow's favorite expression when he noticed that someone went to church real often was, "Guess he's greedy for Gospel."

Speaking of how ones clothes fit tightly the most apt expression was, "Why that fits like a duck's foot in the mud."

Here's one we should follow today, "Go without, use it up, make it do."

Autographs

Some autographs were humorous, many godly, some gave advice, good luck, love and friendship. All seemed to be interwoven with only good will.

Songs And Ballads

Many of the earlier songs and ballads were sad and depressing. This one taken from Scott Eastman's diary (1888 - 1890) is an example.

Verse: ANNIE'S GRAVE

I remember well the time, though it was many years ago,
When I wooed and won the love of dear Annie.
Oh the time went swiftly by like a sweet gliding stream
But that happy time is past and my hair is turning gray.
For that loved one I never more shall see, and my heart is sad and lonesome
I weep from day to day, since dear Annie is no longer here with me.

Chorus:

Oh Annie, dear Annie — thou art laid where the tall willows wave,
And my heart is sad and lonely, yes my heart is sad and lonely,
As I weep o'er dear Annie's grave.

Verse:

T'was a bright and sunny morning in the autumn of the year,
When they told me I'd lost dear Annie; that her sweet and gentle voice I never more should hear;
Or her winning smiles would beam again on me,
In a little green vale where the sweet flowers bloom near the spot where the tall willows wave,
They have laid her there to rest and my heart is sad and lonely as I weep o'er dear Annie's grave.

Ad from old United Opinion of Bradford

"Almost a Miracle!
Eyesight Restored!!
New Life and Strength!!!"

"Mr. Blake, one of Corinth's most honest and industrious farmers, speaks in praise of Green Mountain Sarsaparilla. His own words:-

'C. T. Smith & Co., Gents: I had one of the worst attacks of measles, that nearly used me up. Lost my eyesight; no appetite, no strength and generally broken up, but am pleased to say that one bottle restored my sight, renewed my appetite and strength, and made me feel like a new man.

Weather Predictions

Fog on the hill
Brings water to the mill.
Fog in the valley
Makes more work for Sally.

Signs Of Rain

Number of stars within ring around the moon, number of days before storms.
Flies bite and will not shoo away.
Tree toads cheeping.
Sunshine before roofs are dry, more rain.
Sunshine before rain stops, more rain.
When water boils quickly away.
Sparrows and swallows swooping in low circles toward the ground.
Cows lying down in pasture in early morning.
If wind blows smoke from chimney to the ground, rain before long.
Mackerel sky, rain is nigh.
Hens curling up and picking their feathers. Hens staying out in rain, will not clear soon.

Fair Weather

Cobwebs on grass.
Foggy in morning, burn off before noon.
Locust shrilling.
August 24 if fair and clear, prosperous autumn that year.
When new or crescent moon tips up to hold powder horn, dry month.
Whipporwill calling each night, good weather.

Autumn And Winter Signs

Many skunks about farm buildings in late summer and early fall, severe winter.
Orange sunsets, drought.
Long needles on pine trees mean good fruit year, heavy nut crop, severe winter.
Clouds north of sun at sunset, rain or wind. Clouds to south, fair tomorrow.
Frequent sight of Northern Lights in August, cold winter.
Wind in northeast, snowfall deep.
Ice-coated boughs on trees in winter storm, bumper apple crop.
Snow dropping from branches before sun comes out, next storm snow. Same results if snow blows off barn roof.
Snow at high noon, heavy storm.
March in January, January in March, I fear,
If grass grows in January, it grows the worse for all the year.
February fills the ditches.

Spring

A cold April, a full barn.
When April blows its horn (windy), good for hay and corn.
April and May are keys of the year.
Peepers in spring must be frozen out three times before spring comes to stay.
First peepers, three weeks before children can go barefoot.

Summer

Rain on St. Swithin's Day (July 15), 40 days of rain.
If horses stretch out their necks and sniff the air or assemble in a corner of the field with their heads down wind, look for rain.

Ground Hog Day (February 2)

Ground-Hog Day is half the wood and half the hay.
Wherever the wind will be at sunset on Ground-Hog Day, there will be its home for two months. Should it be north or northwest, look for cold weather.

Candlemas Day (February 2)

The farmer had as soon see his wife on the bier
As that Candlemas Day should be pleasant and clear.
If woodchuck sees its shadow on Candlemas Day, six more weeks of winter.

General

Evening red and morning gray
Will set the traveler on his way.
But evening gray and morning red
Will bring down rain upon his head.

If smoke in the evening doth downward incline
The sun on the morrow unclouded will shine;
If it mounts upward as straight as a die
Then storm clouds and tempest will battle on high.

Excerpt from United Opinion of Bradford, April 24, 1891

Corinth

Our town has suffered in its fair reputation a good deal in the past year by the conduct of a few families in connection with the distillation of cider brandy, but it is not true that Orange County or the Town of Corinth has for 20 years been notorious for its stills. W. M. formerly was in the business, and suffered the penalties. Of late it has been generally understood that D. E. was in the business but there was some hesitation among his neighbors, and those who were sure of his guilt, about entering complaint against him. He is understood to be a vindictive character and unaccountable misfortunes have happened to those who have offended him. He gets little sympathy in town. Distilling cider brandy is at a standstill since D. E. escaped the sheriff and deputies. The arrest of these men will have a wholesome effect upon the whole rum element in Corinth and is one of the steps that shows prohibition does prohibit in Vermont.

Old Newspaper Clippings

(Item published in the Aurora of the Valley, Newbury, dated April 13, 1878)

East Corinth. No great physical or political changes seem to have taken place in this village of late, though some are in prospect no doubt. This village, you know, is "a little spot of earth among the hills, where the wind blows and the sun shines," and so mote (might) it be and continue ever more.

Woolworth's Building Rival

1920. There must be "a long, long trail a-winding" in some East Corinth house for our own news column stated recently that Mrs. Nathan Taplin had been coming down stairs for a week and the item didn't say whether she had reached the ground floor yet or not.

Political Argument, 1880

A Democratic lawyer from New York and Dr. Jenne, a local physician and strong Republican, were discussing the news of the day at the tavern. Among subjects mentioned was that (Pres.) Grant had softening of the brain. "Whoever saw a Republican that hasn't?" asked the lawyer, "Whoever saw a Democrat that had any brains to soften?" retorted the doctor.

Back Seat, Please

Corinth item, 1908. Much as we dislike to have to refer to the matter again, we will say that if the ladies who attend entertainments at Academy Hall have not sufficient consideration for the pleasures of others to remove their large head gear (hats), the management will be justified in reserving back seats for that kind and see that they occupy none other.

Unchaperoned?

July, 1901. The lady boarders at Maplewood Farm took a tramp up Mount Tug Monday morning.

Tributes Paid To Past Generations

(From their obituaries)

Those who were of her generation have long since died but they told of her social nature when young. Ready wit and vivacity kept her ever youthful and she was popular with each succeeding generation. She was a famous cook, skilled in needlework, weaving thousands of yards of carpeting. She was a neighbor of a kind which knew not trained nurses. Until her 89th year she lived alone, keeping well her own house. She left property to pay for all done for her, dying, as she lived independent.

******

She was a woman of decided opinions and strong sympathies. It is well to ponder for a moment in these days of struggle for exalted station in society and for wealth, the virtues of this woman who did her work well, even though in humble walks of society.

******

******

It was never his purpose to either hate or injure anyone. There was very poor soil in his soul for such a thing as revenge or fancied wrong.

******

He has done service for more people during his life, and lived in more homes than any other man in this town. An industrious and kind-hearted man and a friend to all. Peace be to his ashes.

He loved nature and treated his brute followers like personal friends. The touching request made a few days before his death, that his cows and horses might be driven before his window for a last good-bye, reveals the kindly nature of this man. A good man has gone from among us.

After a long and fearful conflict with disease he was obliged to succumb. His friends accompanied him to the banks of the river, saw him pass out of sight, turned back and wept. He was gentle without weakness, singularly pure without imbecility, pious without pretense, active without bustle. It is enough to know he is with Jesus. Long, long years must pass away before the tears cease to flow for this young man.

Without gasp or pain, suddenly and noiselessly as a candle is snuffed out, so passed his spirit.

******

He was a hard-working man and honest in all his dealings.

******

******

He was always interested in any scheme which tended to promote the public welfare, and from his comfortable home dispense an open-hearted hospitality. No man or beast was ever refused shelter who sought his door.

******

******

The fairest morning sky often becomes o'ercast with clouds, early in the day shadows deep may fall. Thus is often the day of human life but let us remember that beyond the clouds the sun ever shines. Consumption seized upon her vitals, she failed rapidly and quietly sank to rest in the sleep that knows no awakening to life's woes.

******

He was a man of intelligence and of more than ordinary ability in some directions. He bought, trained and sold more horses than any man in this section of the country in his day. When strength failed he was obliged to avail himself of such sustenance as the town affords to those in poor circumstances. There were none of his kind to follow him to the grave. Thus comes to the end of life a lonely man once known to everybody here. He lived in faith and hope of a better portion in the life beyond.

******

The best is needed for Heaven. Stern indeed is the pain of gathering up the little playthings, a task that many parents have been called to do. They are rich who can give so much to Heaven and the Christian believes that on the tablets of eternity is written a day when love shall meet and clasp its own.

******

on the ill-fated express, he sent mourning to hundreds of families, including our neighbor.

******

"I will gather you one by one, O ye children of Israel." Thus one by one the generation of our fathers passes from the stage of human action, until but few remain of those who were the men of activity in the affairs of life.

******

He was one of the pioneers of this new country and experienced much hardship and deprivation in Corinth's first settlement. By industry, honesty, uprightness and steady perseverance in all his course, he gained the good will of all, also a competency of the good things of life. He fell asleep in death without a struggle or a groan but, we hope, to rise to a glorious immortality.

He was put out to service with Capt. Isaac Heath, a wealthy and prominent Corinth farmer until 21 years old. He went to Boston to work and was on the first train that made a trip from Boston to Lowell. After he returned to Corinth he sold Morgan horses as he was an excellent judge of horseflesh. He cast his first presidential vote for Andrew Jackson and was always a staunch Democrat.

(Death of an 18-year-old girl of typhoid fever, 1863. Buried in Munn and Rowell Cemetery.) Julia was unconscious for several hours previous to her death but revived before the end and told her mother of some verses she had written and hidden three months earlier this year. She asked that they be sung at her funeral, which request was complied with.

THE DYING CHILD

I do not wish to stay, mother,
In a frail world like this,
My spirit's yearning for the one
Of never-ending bliss.

Now dearest mother, fare thee well,
My earthly ties are riven;
Prepare to meet me once again
In that bright home in heaven.

The Pauper's Burial

"In a cemetery at Corinth a handsome marble slab has been placed by the Selectmen at the head of an aged woman who died this spring in the town poor house.

Many years ago this woman found herself without support and threw herself on the town. She was so industrious and prudent the authorities thought she had saved the town hundreds of dollars so they erected this memorial tablet. It is doubtful if a parallel case can be found."

OUR INVITATION

Dear Friends:

Do you remember these familiar scenes in the town of Corinth? Do you remember Cookville, Goose Green, Taplin Hill, Dearborn Hill and Pike Hill? Do you remember the Center Church, The Meadow Meeting House, the Daniel Cooke Inn and Corinth Academy? Do you remember the beautiful views, the drives and the old faces? Do you remember the villages of East Corinth, West Corinth, Corinth Corner and South Corinth now in the full green of spring?

If the old scenes and times appeal to you, the people of Corinth most cordially invite you to come again to the old town and join in the celebration of its Bicentennial. All friends, whether former residents or not, who are interested in our town are most cordially invited to join us.

"There is no place like the old place,
Where you and I were born;
Where we lifted first our eyelids on the Splendor of the morn.
There are no times like the old times,
They shall never be forgot;
There is no place like the old place
Keep green the dear old spot."

Corinth Bi-Centennial Song

Tune: "The Battle Hymn of the Republic"
Written by Mrs. Eugene D. Eastman

"CORINTH, WE LOVE YOU"

1. In the early part of spring-time
'Bout two hundred years ago,
Three men came here from New-b'ry
With their Ket-tles through the snow
And when they viewed this countryside
No further would they go.
O, Corinth, we love you!

CHORUS
Corinth, Corinth, we all love you
All your loyal sons and daughters
Proudly sing their loudest praises
O, Corinth, we love you!

2. They tapped the trees for sugar
Just as we still do today
They built themselves a cabin,
For they said "tis here we'll stay."
The soil was rich for farming
And the fields would yield them hay
O, Corinth, we love you!
CHORUS

3. So back they went to New-b'ry
Just to get their fam'-lies there
And brought them home to Corinth
To the land that was so fair,
They knew that in God's country
'Twas the best place anywhere.
O, Corinth, we love you!
CHORUS

4. The farms began to increase, as
More people came to stay
The schools and churches soon were built
Some you still see today
From mines and mills and country stores
Grew villages so gay.
O, Corinth, we love you!
CHORUS

5. The bubbling brooks and mountain streams
Still give us great delight,
Our hills that seem to touch the sky
Still thrill us with their height;
In other towns the moon and stars
Just never seem so bright.
O, Corinth, we love you!
CHORUS

6. We have a war-time record, which Allows us all to boast
When any war was started
We had folks at every post,
In honor of our service men
We proudly give a toast.
O, Corinth, we love you!
CHORUS

7. When people tour the country
They all stop to see our town
The pictures they have taken
Often bring them great renown
And when they leave I'm sure they say "That place deserves a crown."
O, Corinth, we love you!
CHORUS

8. The years pass swiftly onward
And the people go and come
But Corinth's ever cherished in
The heart of everyone
And with God's help it's sure to stay
The best place 'neath the sun.
O, Corinth, we love you!
CHORUS

CORINTH BICENTENNIAL HISTORY SONG

Tune: "When I Was A Lad" from Gilbert & Sullivan's "Pinafore" Words written by Mary Hunter Holland

Sung between acts of "Aaron Slick from Punkin Crick" by Carol Brainerd, Bonnie Woodington, Kay Pierson, Colleen Brainerd, Connie Longo, Janice Brainerd and Wanda Sampson who represented members of the Town History Committee.

ALL: Oh this is the year, as you know well
We cel-e-brate our bi-cen-ten-ni-al.
A hist'ry book the town pro-posed
And we are the com-mit-tee the se-lect-men chose
Yes we are the com-mit-tee the se-lectmen chose.

ALL: We did the task with a-lac-ri-ty
And now we're taking orders for the his-to-ry
We did the task with a-lac-ri-ty
And now we're taking orders for the his-to-ry.

And I'm Vi-ola the Corinth clerk
I keep town records and I nev-er shirk
I find old maps and charts and deeds
And get the in-for-ma-tion the com-mit-tee needs

ALL: She gets the in-for-ma-tion the com-mit-tee needs.
I've kept my fiiles so care-ful-ly
That they have been an as-set to the his-to-ry.

ALL: She's kept her files so care-ful-ly
That they have been an as-set to the history.

And I am Grete who un-der-took
To compile all the da-ta and to write the book.
I read all night and wrote all day
And Jack went down to Ar-nold's just to get a-way.
ALL: And Jack went down to Arnold's just to get a-way.
I pre-sented all the facts so skill-ful-ly
That now we're proud to offer the town his-to-ry.
ALL: She pre-sented all the facts so skill-ful-ly
That now we're proud to of-fer the town his-to-ry.

I'm Esther and my work was ver-sa-tile
I'd run on errands then I'd type a while.
I proof-read copy and I looked up dates
And I drummed up orders for the picture plates.
ALL: She drummed up orders for the pic-ture plates.
I did my work quite cheer-ful-ly
And now I am delighted with the history.
ALL: She did her work quite cheer-ful-ly
And now she is de-lighted with the his-tory.

I'm Nettie and I checked each place and date
Re-stored the map of eigh-teen fif-ty eight.
I made a new map for sixty-three
And noted ev-ry res-i-dence from A to Z.
ALL: She not-ed ev-ry res-i-dence from A to Z.
I made the maps with such acc-ra-cy
That now they are all chart-ed in the his-to-ry.
ALL: She made the maps with such acc-ra-cy
That now they are all chart-ed in the his-to-ry.

My name is Marj. and I had fun
Writing up the yarns that the old folks spun.
For a couple of years and may-be more
I've gathered many stor-ies of Cor-inth folk-lore.
ALL: She's gathered many stor-ies of Corinth folk-lore.
I wrote them down for pos-ter-it-y
And now they are re-cord-ed in the history.
ALL: She wrote them down for pos-ter-i-ty
And now they are re-cord-ed in the his-to-ry.

I'm Alice and I know ev-ry one in town
Whether just plain Joe or man of great re-known.
I looked up the ped-i-gree of ev-ry one
And now I'm glad to tell you that my work is done.
ALL: And now she's glad to tell you that her work is done.
I wrote down the record of each fam-ly tree
And now you all can read it in the history.

ALL: She wrote down the record of each fam-ly tree
And now you all can read it in the his-to-ry.

Oh I am Hon-o-ra and with greatest tact
I conducted research to es-tab-lish fact.
I wrote to former res-i-dents
I even thought of writ-ing to the pres-i-dent.

ALL: She even thought of writing to the pres-i-dent.
I checked the congres-sion-al li-bra-ry
And gath-ered vi-tal da-ta for the his-to-ry.

ALL: She checked the congres-sion-al li-bra-ry
And gath-ered vit-al da-ta for the his-to-ry.

Brief Description of Bicentennial Celebration

(This account is a combination of two articles which were submitted to the United Opinion of Bradford, Vermont by Mrs. George Hastings and Mrs. Morris Knapp and appeared in the July 10, 1964 issue.)

A colossal feat of enthusiasm, cooperation, planning, scheduling and teamwork terminated Corinth's 4th of July weekend in one of the finest of Bicentennial celebrations.

Each of the events was enjoyed by nearly all of the townspeople plus scores of former residents, friends and relatives.

The weather was perfect and the general spirit of the occasion was such that one visitor commented thus: "This is like a huge family reunion where all the townspeople have joined as one big family for a couple of days of fun and reunions of old friends, schoolmates and neighbors."

On June 26th and 27th the first event took place when the play "Aaron Slick from Punkin Crik" was given under the direction of Mrs. Bert Holland to a full house both evenings. The play was a "repeat" as it was given forty years ago in this community.

July 3rd was Cookeville Day and all events took place in that section of town.

Model passing through rooms of Old Inn - "Fashion Show of Yesteryear"

Three Generations of Brides

Fashion Show Models in Front of Inn

The Granite State Highlander Scottish Bagpipe Band paraded and drilled in the tiny village at twelve noon.

At two p.m. about 50 ladies and three brave gentlemen, from all parts of town and many relatives back for the occasion, modeled gowns of yesteryear.

One young girl's dress was a replica of the style worn in 1764 and was modeled by Miss Laura Jane Fehrs of Armonk, New York, a descendant of Abel Jackman, an early settler in the town. An interesting feature of the show was three of the granddaughters of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Eastman who modeled wedding gowns of that family.

Miss Patsy Clement of Monroe, New Hampshire, modeled the gown of her grandmother, Mrs. Honora (Murphy) Eastman; her sister, Miss Mary Jo Clement, modeled her great-grandmother's gown, Jennie (Batchelder) Eastman; Miss Sandra Eastman of East Corinth modeled the gown worn by her great-great-grandmother, Charlotte (Scribner) Eastman. Scott Eastman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Eastman, wore a suit of the 1880 era; Thomas Fehrs of Armonk, New York, wore a boy's suit of the year 1905 and carried one of the first teddy bears ever made; and Herbert Woodington modeled a 1900 bathing suit.

The open stairway descending into the large hall on the first floor of this old inn which was built in 1800, made a perfect setting for the models to begin their parade through the first floor rooms then out onto the front lawn where many of the guests who couldn't get seats inside, were waiting. Following the fashion show a silver tea was served and Mrs. Agnes Hastings and Mrs. Alice Hood poured.

During the fashion show several musical numbers were presented. "Aunt Dinah's Quilting Party" was sung by Miss Jackie Rae Longo, Miss Sue Butler, Mrs. Louise (Brainerd) Thompson and Mrs. Judith (Williams) Barton, all descendants of early settlers. Miss Aina Jo Olsen, sang, "Annie's Grave," the words of which were found in a 100 year old diary belonging to Scott Eastman, the father of one of the selectmen, Eugene Eastman. The music was written by Miss Olsen.

Miss Lorraine Devins sang "Love's Old Sweet Song" and Miss Sue Butler sang "I Love You Truly." Mrs. Lawrence Jackman introduced each model and spoke briefly about each gown.

In the evening at the Cookeville School, a supper was served to 300 guests. This was sponsored by the Corinth P.T.O. and planned by Mrs. Maurice Sleeper, chairman, Mrs. Bernard Thurston and Mrs. Richard Hastings.

At 6:30 P.M. an exhibition of interesting articles of yesteryear was shown in the Cookeville Hall, and at 7:30 a Square Dancing exhibition was given by the Corinth-Topsham square dancers, directed by their instructor, Al Monty of Barre. This event was accompanied by a severe thunderstorm but was well-attended, nevertheless.

July 4th was East Corinth Day and began with a parade of Corinth historical, geographical and industrial floats. Warren Sweet was the parade marshal and was followed by the Bradford Legion and Auxiliary Color Guard, Corinth veterans, Corinth's only Gold Star Mother, Mrs. Ray Comstock, and McClure's Student Band. Then came the 35 float entries. Most of the floats were horse drawn and this is probably the first time in more than 20 years that people have seen so many horses in one place at the same time.

Lt. Gov. Ralph Foote spoke to the crowd at the fairgrounds preceding the barbecue dinner which was served to 815 guests. Mrs. Alice Hood and Mrs. Willard Martin were chairmen of the dinner. Mrs. Hood is 76 years old, and in addition to her work on the Town History she labored tirelessly on the dinner and other events of the weekend. Peter Gallerani of Bradford cooked the mostaccholi and James Hood and Alonzo Simpson barbecued the chicken. Alexander Miller of Barre gave a concert of Scottish songs.

During the afternoon a Little League baseball game between West Topsham and East Corinth was played to a tie score of 6 to 6. Some of the young men who used to play in the Connecticut Valley League formed teams and played to a score of 9 to 8.

McClure's Student Band gave a concert and drill on the ball field and movies of previous Labor Day parades were shown at the school cafeteria. In the evening square dancing was held on the ball field with Emerson's Hoedowners providing the music. The final event of the day was a very good display of fireworks which the East Corinth Volunteer Fire Dept. supervised.

On Sunday afternoon there was a picnic at the Meadow Meeting House in South Corinth, followed by a church service with the Rev. Thomas Rose speaking on the "Great Certainties of the Christian Faith." The Rev. Paul Williams of the Corinth Center Church and the Rev. David Pearson of the East Corinth Church assisted with the service.

Miss Lorraine Devins was the organist and Mrs. Richard Colby, pianist. Miss Devins and the Rev. Rose sang two duets during the service. Thus with a feeling of reverence and thankfulness for our forefathers who worked and worshipped to give us our heritage, the Bicentennial of our town ended in this beautiful little church which celebrated its 125th birthday just a year ago.

Each and every event appeared on schedule and all were tremendously well-attended. The townspeople have been drawn closer by the full co-operation of everyone to make the Corinth Bicentennial the grandest event since the charters were granted. As we look back to the past few days it just plain "leaves a warm feeling around our hearts."

Miss Everdene Hood, Bicentennial chairman, deserves much credit for coordinating all plans as does the town history committee who have worked long and tirelessly on the Town History which is now in the hands of the printer and will be available before the end of the year.

Biographical Sketches

AND

Family Records

This is not a complete record of all families who have lived in Corinth since the town was first settled. That would be impossible.

Many came and went, leaving no story of their lives other than perhaps a name on the census roll; others stayed on but not long enough to leave a record of their residence and made no impact on the life of the community. These have not been considered.

The records of this and other towns have been studied giving a fairly complete account of those who have lived here for any length of time and have contributed in their own way — whether good or bad — to the life of their community. It is inevitable that there are errors of statement and omission. If any families have been omitted, it was not intentional.

May these family records be a help to future generations.

JACKMAN

James Jackman came from England in 1634 to settle in Massachusetts. His great, great grandson, Abel, born in 1762 at Salisbury, Massachusetts was the fourth generation to be born in America. Following the outbreak of war he enlisted at the age of fifteen in Col. Jacob Garrish's regiment and served with the American forces at Winter Hill and Cambridge; he also participated in numerous other engagements until his final discharge on Dec. 1, 1781 after a three-month tour of duty in Rhode Island.

The name of Jackman is honorably associated with our three great wars on home soil—The Revolutionary War, War of 1812, and the Civil War. Col. Abel was at West Point at the time of Benedict Arnold's defection. He was one of the earliest settlers of this town—contemporary of Joseph Fellows and Peter Eaton—coming to Corinth in 1788 from Salisbury, Massachusetts. He bought land adjoining the Fellows lot.
